V. 10. meroy and truth] All good we have comes from God mercy, and contancy in keeping his word, Pfal. 40. 11, & 100, 5, Gen. 14, 17. The words may bear this fence also, that to fluch apply themselves to the pradice of godilinch, and keeping of God God Commandements, the goodnedle, mercy, and truth of God in all his commandements, the goodnedle, mercy, and truth of God in all wish. wayes is made known, upon which the love of God (the very life of true religion and godlinesse) is chiesly grounded. I say upon a full apprehension, and approved experience of Gods goodnesse, mer-cy, and truth, With the merciful that wilt show thy selfe (expansors: a word used by Christ upon this occasion, Joh. 14. 21.) merejful. &c. and with the froward, thou wilt shew thy selfe froward, Plal. 18. 25, 26. I think the words will bear this too, as well as that other more obvious sence, and more proper to the place, of which we have poken there : (Plal. 18, 24, 25.) But fee more upon verfe 14. shall dwell at ease] Heb. shall lodge in godnesse. V. 14. The fecret of the Lord] This phrase, the fecret of the Lord is not alwayes used in one sence; for when Job 29. 4. faith, that the fecret of God was upon his Tabernacle, he meaneth it of his fecret favour, and providence towards him in things temporal, bleffing the works of his hands and whatloever belonged to him; whereby many infensibly thrive in this world, as to the admiration of others lobeyond their own expectation; yea, and knowledge too! Of which the Wife man hath this observation, There is that scattereth, and yet increafeth ; and there is that withholdeth more then is meet, but it tendeth to poverty, Prov. 11. 24. See also Prov. 3. 32, 33. For the ittatent to poverty, Prov. 11, 24. See allo Prov. 3, 32, 33. For me imperfund by it, a particular affurance of Gods favour, whereby happinefle is leured to us, both prefent and future. But this doth not feeme so well to agree with the scope of the words, neither here, nor elsethere, where this expression is used. Besides, it is a doftrine suboft to many restrictions and limitations, without which, many are teived by it, or rather deceive themselves. Others therefore understand by it, the doctrine of God, as particularly, before Christ, the Law; a fecret, nor unto all Nations of the world onely, besides the Jewes; but even among the Jewes, though commonly profelled, yet hidden, but to the godly, who earnestly applied them-felves to the search and study of it: which made David elsewhere to pray; Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of by Law : Pfal, 119, 18, and fo highly to prize the knowledge of it, as he doth in that Pfalme, and elsewhere often. THIS Plaime (which I put here at the end, of purpole, as a thing not very pertinent to the matter of the Plaime, nor for every ones reading:) is one of those, which we may call Alphabetical Pfalms; because both for the number, and order; (but in different kinds) they follow the Hebrew Alphabet, which doth consist of 22. letters. Of this kinde be, besides this, the 34. Psalme, which beginneth, I will bleffe the Lord at all times, dec. the 37. Fret not thy elfe because of evil doers; &c. the III. I will praise the Lord with my whole heart, Ge, and 112. Bleffed is the man, Ge. For, Praife ye the Lord, in this and the foregoing 111. Plalme, is rather the title, then the beginning of the Pfalme; and should rather be put over, (as it is by many:) then at the beginning, The 119.

Bleffed are the undefiled in the way, oyc. And lattly, the 145, which beginneth, I will extol thee my God O King, dec. All thefe, as I faid, be Alphabetical, but not exactly all, nor after one kinde. In this, the first in this kinde, every verse (with some exception, of which more, by and by ;) doth begin with a letter, according to the order of letters in the Alphabet, Aleph, Beth, Gimel, &c. So in the 34, and the 145. Pfalmes: but, as I faid, with some exceptions, and divertities, in every one of thefe. For in this, there be three letters, or verses, (according to the order of the Alphabet) deficient; Beth, Vau. and Kuph: and instead of these, three redundant, Beth, Peh, (whereof one is at the end,) and Refb, being all double. It is true indeed, that the fecond word of the fecond 4leph, begins with a Beth; and the third word of the verse He, (or, fifth verse,) begins with a Vau: which is observed by some, as though those letters there should supply the want of two of the 3. verses that are wanting. But there is little likelihood in that conceit; especially, fince we finde nothing, in the same kinde, to supply the defect of the Kuph. And yet I flould like of this better, then of their conceit, (too bold to be admitted) who would have the verses so divided, that that Beth and that Van which we have spoken of, the one the second; the other the third; (as now divided:) might be the first words of the verses: and would have a word () added to the 18. verse, to make it begin with a Kuph. And then for the Peh at the end, they make that to be part of the foregoing verse. But supposing this would do here, yet we shall still be to feek in other Psalmes, of the same kinde, where the like anomalies, or deficiences are to be found. For not to speake of the 34. where at the end we finde a supernumerary Peh, (or verse beginning with the letter Peh:) as it is here: in the 145. Psalme, of the very same kind of Alphabetical disposition as this, there is a Nun wanting, which cannot be fupplied but by fupplying a whole verfe, (by the vulgar Greek and one word or two, I know not how rightly supplied:) which would be of dangerous confequence. Though there be, even of our fide, fome, (Mollerus for one by name) who make no great matter of it, and plainly deliver their opinion, that they believe one verse, librariorum incuria, by the negligence of the Scribes, to be wanting. But the Rabbines there, some of them, make a great mystery of it, as though David in his meditations had feen that dreadful 1-101 afterwards expressed by the Prophet Efay, Chig. 24. 26, and h.d., of purpose, passed it over, to hasten to the contrary Annotations on the Book of Pfalmes.

and more comfortable 1901, which mere begins the 14, verte, but of these conceits, or what may more fassely be answered, more fassel be faild, when we have done with the reft, a sheady mentioned, which we called Alphabetical Psalmes. The next therefore is, the 37. Pfalme, differing from the former in this, that every letter, 37. Frame, amering nometic to meet in this, that every fetter, befides the Alphabetical, hath one verie more belonging to it, not tyed to any letter, but free for any, as in other Pfalmes. So indeed we finge it in the greatest part of it, by far; so that a majore indeed we fin it it in the greatest part or is, by lat ; bothat a majore parts, we call it Alphabetical. But otherwise it hath many anomalies, and exobitances. For besides that some letters (as the Dalleth, and the Capb:) have but one verse, there is no Onajon to be found: no, nor Peh neither; not in its due place, at leaft; but after the Tjade, there is a Peh indeed; but that, not Alphaberical, as I conceive, but meetly cafual, and belonging to the Tjade. Except we shall allow of their conjecture, which I confelle, all things well confidered, is not altogether to be rejected, who would have well confidence, is not alregether to be rejected; who would have a new verfe to begin at their words of the 3, yetfic, (as now divided) YUNU INVO, and DYU read for DYUY, for that we may have a Gnajin to begin with. But this laft of the Lameet to be put have a Gnajin to begin with. But this laft of the Lameet to be put have yellow the lameet part of the words of the lameet to be put had confidered, that this fervite Lameet can be not indicrance, but the lameet for my be shownly to begin with a Gnajin, you many the lameet and the lameet for the lameet of th had confidered, that this service Lannee can use no innocrance just that the verifie may be thought to begin with a Ginglin; no more then the Van before the Than, (TUMUT) at the end of the Pfalm at which haply four might itumble; but they need not; for in this cafe, it as post confiderable; and if not the Van, then neither this cafe, it as post confiderable; and if not the Van, then neither the Confiderable. this care, it is not connectable: and it not the park their negative the Lamed before the Gnaim. But to go on in the general veiw of these Alphabetical Psalmes: The two next, the III, and the 112, are both in their Alphabetical way contrary to this last, For whereas the 37, as we have faid, hath two verses belonging to one letter: these two, have two letters belonging to each Neither is there any considerable anomalie in either of them; fo that we shall need to say no more of them. The last is the 119. Pfalme, which confifts of 22, oftonaries, each letter of the Alphabet in order making 8, verses, all which 8, begin with one letter: and though this be a very long Pfalme, yet I do not finde any thing amille, or out of order, in this neither. Now to conclude concerning these descriptions or anomalies in general; although I am not of opinion, that if it were granted that incurid librariorum (as Mollerus spake before) some have hapned, much can be concluded from thence against the integrity of the Hebrew Text, which doth not conflit in fuch petty things, neither would Beza have made so bold with the new Testament, if he had thought for yet confidering the number of them, and variety. I dwrather open with them that believe fuch defects, or anomilies, (or however to be called) to have proceeded from the author himselfe, who did not think himfelfe bound to fuch niceties, but followed the intention of his minde, wholly bent upon the matter, where the words did not offer themselves; there being no other reason to be given of this Alphabetical disposition, or invention, but to help the memory; a thing not fo confiderable, as to make a businesse of it,

That dostrine therefore that passeth ordinarily for very plausible, that we ought not to serve God for hope of reward: and that lo to do is but mercenary, not ingenuous and acceptable fervice; whether it be as true and confonant to the word of God, as it is commonly delivered and received, I make a question, I am sure that I find Christ himself proposed unto us as an example, who for the joythat was set before him endured the crasse despited the shame, by is fet down a' the right hand of the threne of God. V. 4. I have not face with vain perfens Pfal. 1. 1. See the Notes there, by comparing of which pallages, (the first verse there, with 4, and 5, here) both verbes, to sit, to go, &c. and substantives, ungodly, finners, for nfull there; with the verbes and sub-flantives, here: and their order: it may probably be inferred, that the Pfalmift had no direct aim to any formall gradation, but put the words together, as they offered themselves, having, no other intention, then to make full and solemn profession (as of great confequence, to godlinesse and piety:) that he did avoid the company of wicked ungodly men, as much as he could possibly. I know that a man affecting offentation of wit and fubrilty, might find somewhat even here, in the order, variety, repetition of the words, whereupon to ground some notable (in his own judgement) observation. For my part, I will not attempt it; not because I despaire of finding somewhat that might please such palates but because it is against my judgement; if not conscience. Yet there is no great hurt (fince many are much taken with them :) in fuch observations, fo that they be not much pressed; nor conclusions of confequence in controverted matters, railed from them. But now to the matter of the words; the avoiding of evil company: Out of all question it is that wherein great part of that cirny: Out of all question it is that whetein great part of that cir-cumspect walking, required of all Ch islians, and without which, we can have little ground of affurance, that we are not going in the broad way of eternal destruction: great part, I say, of our circumspect walking in the world, doth consist. For good men, are more apt (fuch is the corruption of nature) to be corrupted by evil company, (according to that of the Apoflles; or rather of an ancient Comick Poet, cited and comfirmed by the Apostle, that cuil communications corrupt gord manners : 1 Cor. 15. 33. than evil men to be benefited by good and godly company. It is incredible, but to them that observe it with care ; what power evill examples in dayly conversation have, to infiniat themselves secretly and infenfibly , (wherein is greatest danger) so that even the best, and best rooted in godlinesse, have occasion enough to seare, and to be aware. However, we must make difference of cvil communications; evil in the very communication it felf: and communicaion, or communications with evill men. For some bad men, though bad in their private and more fecret communication, and convertation, yet out of some civill respect, or otherwise, are inoffensive in their ordinary conversation. Others, as they are in their lives, and ordinary practife; fo in all companies, (except they be restrained by some seare) offensive and scandalous; as by frequent swearing, cur fing, ranck discourse, and the like. We should not upon any termes (if we can avoid it) endure the company of nien, though it be with no danger to our felves, feandslous in their communication, and ordinary talke: except we may take the liberty to reproove them, and that it may probably do them good : fo far at least, as to thew our diflike and just offence. Elfe, men become guilty (though innocent our felves) of that dishonour that is done unto God, by such evil communication, Befides, we must distinguish between men, suspected, but not convicted; and fill having a form of godlinesse; and, open profane, scandalous offendors. According to the Apostles rule, and direction (though it be not altogether the same case now; because we have no profest heathers, or atheists among us: not publickly allowed of , at left; I wish I could say , nor tolerated) 1 Cor. 5. I wrote unto you in an Epiftle, &c. 9, 10, to the end of the chapter: we should, as to matter of scandall, most avoid or endeavour to avoid their company being scandalous in their lives, who are necrest unto us: as of the same house, or parish, and the like.
Others, that we have no relation to, if we light upon them by chance, as our occasions do lead us, we need not be so sempulous But this of avoiding the nearest, &c, must be understood, where we are not obliged by any duty: for we may not cast off obedience, and naturall obligations, in the performance of which the very life of godlinelle is interested, under colour of religion, So much of evil company here upon this place, where we find it by fuch variation of words inculcated and infifted upon, may feree for divers other places, where it is again, whether more largely, or breefly spoken of, word for word, thus; To thee my facer, land, Seek ye my face; Thy face, Lord will feek, Which words, as all agrees, are forewhat defective; that is, somewhat must be supplied to make the sense perfect ! and besides, they are, not misplaced, we may not say; (for such trajections to best authors are ordinary enough; and we have examples of them in divers other places of Scripture) but, not placed in due o der of ordinary construction: Through this defect, and displacing together, great liberty is left to Interpreters; and translated they are by divers, diversly; yet forthat this variety of translations. the vulgar Greek and Latine, who read them otherwise then we do, excepted) comes all to one purpose in point of sense, or sentence : neither is there any (to my best judgement) that either supplies, or places the words better, then this our English here. So that more need not to be said of the words. And as for the sense. that more need not to be 1140 of the words. And as tor the tente, it feems plain enough; to plain indeed, if my judgement) that the very plainneffe makes me fulpect, that there is fomewhat more in it, then hat been yet observed by any that I have feen; I have feen will I feet. That is, As thou haft commanded, that we should feet duy face, so I do. That is the lumme of what is faid. But where compared to the property of the seed of of the s manded? Or, why this command of God, fo expresly, by a kind of Prosopopaia, more then any other, in that kind elsewhere, here fee down? I would fay at least, which would put some more life, or emphasis in the words; that this command of seeking God, being emphals in the words; that this command or teeking tood, peing more particularly, by God, laid upon the heart of man, (a smay appear, Deut, 4, 19, to which some refer us; But if from thence thou shalt feek the Lard thy God, then shalt sinde him, if thou feek him with all thy heart, and with all thy sail:) David in great confidence of his hearty performance, doth here appeal to God, himselfelt the fearcher of the hearts, remembring him (to speak the more movingly) of his own words, and immediately answering, which was been supported by the some the most himself to the sound how the more movingly. as his own heart suggested unto him, But this would have been more plain, I must confesse, if the heart had been mentioned here in the command, as well as it is in the answer. And besides, if my face, had been in the command, Dout, 4, 19. (the onely place we finde, that David could allude unto) so directly expressed, as it is here in this supposed repetition, or citation. That therefore which I do more incline unto, is this. It is a common observation, that in best Writers, sometimes one and the self-same word, not in the same Book onely, but even within the compasse of one or two verses, or so, is used in a different sence. So the word 7770 Job 2, 23. Be glad then ye children of Sion, &c. twice repeated, by the Chaldee paraphrafe, and most Rabbines, as likewife by our English margin there, (to which many other translations agree) is taken in the first place for a Teacher; in the second, for Rain. In the New Testament it is very frequent, according to best Interpreters, who commonly call it (where one word, or phrase doth occurre in two different fenses) an allaraxx 704, or manni. Now to apply this to our prefent occasion: There never was man (I think) either Prince or other, that ever shewed more zeal to Gods outward worship and service (as established in those dayes) then David did. Of his inward affection, there is no question to be made: elfe his outward carriage and profession would but little have availed with God: but that is not to our purpose here. Although therefore a man, (even in those dayes) that had the knowin this world, and the greatest comfort of his life, to be neer where the Ark of God was, the place of his refidence among men, in those the Ark of God was, the place of his refluence among them, in trote dayes; where the Tabernacle, or Altars were, where daily fa-cifices were offered, and other religious fervices, by Priefts and Levices performed, and divers feafts and folemnities kept and ob-Befides what we have here in this Pfalme to that purpole, retved. Denotes what we have here in this trialme to that purpole; read, Plal. 65, 4. but efpecially, Plal. 84. How amidole are thy Tabernacles, Ourd of Hills: 8 hy fail longels, 8 c. And Plal. 42. As the Hari panieth after the water brooks, 8 c. And befides his own refilmant in the Plal. tellimony in the Plalmes, we may learn as much from divers paf-fages of the Hidroy of his life. When the Ark was brought unto Sion, to be placed in that Tabernacle which he had prepared for it; how was he then transported with joy, even to the fcorn and contempt of his own wife, 2 Sam. 6. 20, 31, 30. And none of his flights from Sauth, how bitterly doth he expoftulate his case with Saul 1 style between the sauth of the Lard bave stirred thee is against me let him accept an offering: but if they be the children of men, surfed be they before the Lord: for they have diven me out this day from abiding in the inheritance of the Lord; faring, To ferve other gods, I Sam, 26, 19. Now to feel the face of Ord, may be understood two wayes. More generally taken, it comprehends whatfoever is of the substance of true Religion : So we had it before, This is the generation of them that feek him, tons over that is diving the many time generation of them that feel by fixe, O find if face, O find if the advantage their offene, and feel, my face in the fallfillion they will feel me early. In this general sence, the face of find, is no more, then what is more usually find; it follows that the face of find, is no more, then what is more usually find; the face of find, is no more, then what is more usually find; the face of find, is no more, then what is more usually find; to feel God; as Ila. 45. 19. I faid not unto the feed of Jacob, Seel ye me of jeck tod; as 13. 45. 19. 1 Jund not unto toe Jecto of Jacob-Seckey me in vain a libe Lord (predignelingfle), I deduce things that are right. A very Common Scripture phrase it is, as cannot be unknown to them that are verified in it. In a more thief tence, by the face of God, is meant the Ath of God, the place of his refidence, and where (by is meant the Ark of God, the place of his renderice, and where (by fome ontward fights and vidences) he was wont, upon occasion, to make himself visible. So Plat. 43. 2. My foul thirstelf for God, for the living God: when shall I come and see the face of God? or; a spear before the face of God. So Moller, Bucer, Calvin, translate the words; (not as we there, who leave out the word face, in many places, in-dead, fulficiently enough included in the word before, but in this place, a word of great pregnancy and importance, and therefore not to have been omitted) and so expound them directly, as intended by David, of the Ark and Sanctuary. See also Varablus upon that verse, and upon the fixth verse of the same Psalm; where he racitly cuts, and upon the fixed verte of the atmer shall synthese network precisely the open standards, of sparzeb tearab homins; unadvifedly followed by ours) and makes it; Quanda spaining of apparebo and facility and the standards of the well observed by one upon that place, (a very exast observed to see upon that place, (a very exast observed to see the standards of the standards o very exact oncurve: of occupance words and phrales) that what I Chron. 13, 10, is, before God 5, in a Sam. 6,-1, is, with the Ark of God. My opinion therefore is, that David at this time, when he wrote this, being deprived of this ineffinable benefit (as he when he wrote Plajme 42, and divers others) in the ardency of his zeal, preffing God with all medican conductive that the wrote Plajme 42, and divers others) in the ardency of his zeale, preffing God with all medican and annitrates that he are all the prefixed god with all medican and annitrates. preffing God with all motives and arguments that he could frame preming Our with all motives and arguments that he could traine or think of, that God would reflore him to that happinelle, he fo wanted and longed for; among others, he prefleth God with his own words, injoying all men (in that fence we have flewed) to feck his face; that is, to inform themselves diligently concerning his will; to apply themselves to his service; to trust in him, to depend of him, &c. a precept (in this general fence) in all plates, and at litimes, equally binding: but David, as though he could not ferve God as he flould, whileft excluded from this necer approach; (as his words feem to imply, I Sam. 26. 19. which have already been spoken of) and by consequence, not perform what he required : He therefore retorts upon him(as it were)his own words, and prefles him for performance on his fide. So the words (and that without any violence, or far fetche confluction) become very pregnant, and emphatical ; which otherwise seem but flat and dilute According to this interpretation, the words would rather be thus Supplied , Then haft faid, (it is thine own word and speech) Seek ye supplied; I mu half faith unto thee, (it is time own word and speech) seek ye my face: my hear faith unto thee, (it is the defire of my foul; thy command is become my request) Thy face, Lord, will I feek.

V. 10. When my father and my mother forfale me] He magnifieth Gods love towards his, which far passeth the most tender love of parents towards their children, Ifai, 49. 15. The ground of fuch emphatical expressions, of trust and considence in God, see upon Pfal. 16. 1. for in thee do I put my truft. The words might have been translated, Trough my father, &c. as well as When my father, &c. but that is not very material; neither can any man infer from this, that David was forfaken, or that he was afraid when he fo wrote, that he should be forfaken by his parents. For this is but a supposition; and such a supposition, as is not grounded upon any propolition; and little a impolition; as a line distribution and little a implantically Davids confidence in Gods love, and the greatness withal of that love in Gods fo far transcending all humane love. As when the Apolle faith; Though an Angel from heaven: Gal. 1. 8. nay we ought rather to infer (if we must one of the two) that David did

V. 5. Because they regard not the works of the Lord, &c. 1 As the words have particular reference unto David his case, so the works of words have particular reference unto David his case, of Gods the Lord, and the operations of his hands, must be understood of Gods counsel and purpose, to bring David to the Crown; manifested and brought about by many notable events, and particular providences and dispensations; as may appear by the ftory: which they uences and empenations; as may appear by the troy; which will the took no notice of at all, shewed themselves (the proper temper, for the most part, of profane men and Epicures) very supine and negligent in things of high moment: they thir did, and did not these themselves. not therein acknowledge the hand of God, fliewed themselves very obstinate, and inflexible; which kind of men are properly faid, 3 soμαχείν, to fight against God; as opposing to the manifestation of his Will, and cleare demonstrations of his Divine disposition that the manifestation of his Will and the manifestation of his Divine disposition. Itation of his Will', and cleare demonstrations of his Dwine di-fipensation, the counciles of humans with and policy. To this pur-pose we read of Moses, AC, 7.25, For he physical his between would have enderflood, how that God by his hard would addieve them, we have the properties of the physical hard would addieve them, that they madelflood how the more general force, her was readily (as Elay v. 12.) not to regard he work of the Lord, we we note that the operations of his hands: who being taken up with from these, as the ambitious and coverous; or excluding all care for the felves, and therein valacing versares haveints 12. neither of felves, and therein placing greateft happineffe; neither of

They also more particularly may be charged with those words, who are altogether for the prefent, and judge of men generally as good or bad, in favour, or out of favour with God, from their present condition, and what happens unto them in this World, Whereas it is a mystery of providence, to husband our salvation by contraries; and to let them have their wills in this World most, that have least of Gods Favour. The Plalmist speaks of it, as that have lead of Jous Pavolit. The Platinite speaks of it, as of a great mykery, O Lord, how great are thy work? I and thy thoughts are very deep. Verf. 1. Give unto the Lord Plat. 96, 7, 8.

Oye mighty Heb. ye fons of the mighty. He exhorteth the proud tyrants to humble themselves under Gods hand, and mot to have fuch an opinion of their own power and greatneffe, as mot men in high places have. This exposition I like very well, and somewhat the better, for that we read of so many great Princes, both good and bad, but bad and cruel especially that have been very fearful of thunder, the fubject of this pfalme: as Augustus, Caligula, and divers others. But it will be objected; How then doth David invite such to worship God in the beauty of holinesse (that is, in his Temple, his Sanctuary, at Jerusalem:) as in the next verse? Yea very well, if we take the words as an invi-tation not so much to solemne service in his Temple; as to the knowledge and acknowledgement of the God of that Temple, and of his divine Service, there performed : to which Temple and fervice fuch Kings and Princes as had knowledge of the God of his Ifrael, were wont to fend great presents every wear, and performed some duties by their deputies, in acknowledgement of his Soveraingty. However, the greater part of Interpreters, by, some of the mighty, understand, some, the Israelites in general, so stiled because of Abraham, Isaak, and Jacob: men of famous memory, to caule of Abraham, Ilaak, and Jacob: men of famous memory, to oplicity) of great credit with God, both living, and dead to others, the Angels, as Plal. 89, 67. For who in the heaven, &c. who among the famos of the mighty, &c. and fome, the Stars of Heaven, as Job 38, 79. All things well weighed, it is not easie to determine, which interpretation is not genuine. If Angels, (according to the Chaldee paraphrafe, and divers others) be spoken unto; by the beauty of bolinesse, (which is not so usual) we must understand the heavens. But to the general fone of the Plaimitt, to fet out the power and majefty of God, and to affert his providence, (whereof fee upon the third verfe, The voice of the Lord:) any of these expositions may serve well enough Hereupon his conclusion was, (as it was judeed the main end of all his Philosophy, which in these Atheistical times is by some much endeavoured to be revived, though never was any thing, in the judgement of ancient wife Heathens, more foolin and fenfelesse;) that all fear of God, whe Heatners, more tools and temeterle:). I take at the test of some and all Religion, was a groundled thing; a Central at frest in territ, edit per treature Morteles, pavido com pendent mentible in territ, edit per treature Morteles, pavido com pendent mentible per Efficient an ainon bomble formidane Doum, &c. So doth Li Gere Efficient Rolling and Control of the Caule of thinder and lightning; and repeated long discourse of the caule of thinder and lightning; and repeated to the caule of the Cau it often, and therefore men should not fear, because it is an effect of nature. Which is, in very deed, a very fenfelesse argument. For why may not the same things be ascribed unto God, as superme; and yet acknowledged, to have more immediate and secondary (but fubordinate unto the supreme) causes? And it, God as we teach, and the more fober heathens believed, be the Author of nature; why leffe powerful, or leffe to be feared, in natural causes, or events, then in those things, that he bringeth to passe by a more immediate power? Although therefore if we should take time to consider well of all particulars, there might somewhat be found perchance in the effects of thunder and lightning, that would pose here is no natural cause, because not understood:) but however, granting that it is a work of nature, and that the cause is not hidden; yet neverthelesse it doth not follow, but that thunder after a more sublime way of contemplation, (by Anaxagoras, an ancient Philosopher, of good account; and by Plato after him, much cient Philolopher, of good account; and by Plato after him, much commended; i) without any reflect to the natural and fecondary cantees, may be deribed to God ablolutely, and flyled, The water of the Lord, or, of God! as it is here; I'ke noife of his voite, and the found that got hour of his month, Job 37, 2. The voite of the Almighty God, when he feederby, Eagu to, T., There is no question, but that Thunder and Lightning, though in that order and counte of natural causes and counted nature, (or feries and connexion of natural causes and counted the counterpart of the th end intended and appointed by God, to repetite the infolencies of fome, and to awaken the confciences of others, (of all, I do not fay: God hath his end in that too,) whom the confideration of his other works, and daily providence, cannot move to the feare, or acknowledgement of a Superiour Power and Deity. A very fit expression therefore it is of the Thunder, to call it the voice of God : and it were not amifle, (fuch is the dulneffe of most) if all natural things, had the Name of God (some such way as the name of God is added by the Hebrews to all great things, as, a tree of God, a City 18 andea by the receives to all great timings, as, an every own, a city of God, &c, that is, agreat rive, a press tim, &c, and fo in the New Terlament, devict robbig, exceeding fair, Act, 7, 20,) inferibed, it being the chief end of all natural things, to put us in minde of God. The Grecians allo for fome fuch realon, called all extraordinary great tempests, Diognicolas, And the ancient Romans were wont to fay, Deus tonat, Deus fulgurat, &c. for which afterwards (as now it useth) by an ellipsis, as they call it, of the Nominacive, for more brerity was faid, tonat, (for, Deus tonat.) fulgurat, &c. Yet the Hebrews have a more proper word too, for Thunder : whence Branerges, in the New Testament (according to the Greek pronunciation, for Benerehem,) is interpreted, The font of Thunder. Mark 3, 17. As for that other argument of Epicurus, (which whether, he borrowed of the stage, or the stage from him, I know not: but an argument, it feems, among the profane atheistical rabble, of old, in great request;) Qualify fupiter, atque alii fulgentia divi Terrifico quatiunt quett; J. in his 1 emple doth every one speak of his glory] The words of themfelves, are plain enough: but the coherence is not fo plain. David in the beginning of the Pfalme, doth exho t all men to glorifie God, in general: and particularly, to glorific him in the beauty of Holmelle, (or, in the gbrious faniluary; as the margin there;) that is, in his Sanctuary. Now in the conclusion he remembers the Temis in its sanctiary. Now in the concention he remembers the Left-ple agin; (fee upon Pfal. 5. 7.) whereby he may be thought to invite all men to become Jews, or Profelytes. Some conceive that this Pfalme was appointed by David to be fung in the Church, (Temple, or Tabernacle) in time of great Tempess and Thunders; which is not unlikely. The Letanies used of old in Christian Churches, had fuch a beginning. A Pfalm and fong] Where the mufical instruments went before the voice, a Pfalm and Song, (as it is here) in the infeription: voice, a Pjain and song, (as it is need) in the initial of where the voices of men went before the inftruments, then a fing and Pjaine. This is the device of some Rabbins upon this title. But other Rabbins plainly confesse they know no ground of this affertion, or which should be the cause of this difference. Indeed this observation concerning the different placing of the words, seemes to be a meere querck. But that the adding of the word song, ("") whether before or after, to the usuall word Pfalm, may imply fomewhat of mens voyces more then was usuall and o dinary, is not improbable. And here it might well be said that TW is added of purpose (A Pfalm: a canticle) to intimat, that this Pfalme was made upon an extraordinary occasion of publick joy, which feemeth to be the most proper use and signification of the word TW according to that of the

It is his principall aime in all that Pfalme, and therefore he often repeates it. So this for here of the Pfalmift, must be understood, as a declaration of the ground, and subject of his present thanks, and exaltation, or extelling of God: not as a generall ground, as if we were not bound to praile an i excell him, but when he doth us good: or rather, (for when is it , that he doth not : fince we live, move, and have our being in H.m: Acts 17. 28. and in joy dayly the benefite of his light, and the like) plyeth us with extraordinary occasions. All men, the very worst and atheisticall of men, are mooved (by meer inflings very worst and attentional of men, and moored of by meer infilings of nature) to lift up their hearts, and hands, (though they acquir themselves of it but very superficially, or superstitionally) for present mercies, and successes. But in time of distrible and discounting the superstition of the superstitional of the superstition of the superst ragement, to continue zealous (upon our former principles; and not in base complyance, for our advantage) in Gods service; to bleffe God for all, as well unpleasing, as pleasing; is the very touch one of rooted and well-grounded religion, whereby God is most glorified.

It may be said, that David spake this hetorically, the better to fer out the greatness of his joy. For so our Saviour compareth the forrowes and afflictions of godly people in this world, to a womans travell in child-birth. A weman when fhe is in travell, hath forrow, because her bour (ortime of futtering) is come: but aff on as five is delivered of the child, fle remembreth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the remembers in a mare the angulus, 30° by the market a man world. Verf. 1. B Leffed is he whose transgression is forgiven, &c.]
These two first vertes are cited by the Apostle, Rom, 4.7, 8. and it is upon a special occasion, to comfirm a doctrine of 4.7, 8. and it is upon a special occasion, to construm a dostrine of great consequence, by him delivered, to wit, that a man is now institled by works, but by Faith. Even at David alfo, faith ht., definitely the li-ffensifie of the man, unto whom Ged impareth righteenfus without works; springs, Bleffed are they whose inspirites are fugives, and whose fast are towered. Bleffed is that man to whom the Lard will be a superior of the superior of not impute fin. But might it not have been replyed, that David as he doth here describe the blestednesse of man, unto whom God imputeth righteoussied without works; so elsewhere the same, David describeth the blessednesses of the man, that salketh not in David deterioreth the melteanens of the man, that Laffelh not in the comfel of the unguly, Pfal, 1, 1, 8c. and, That is undefield in the way; who walk; in the Law of the Lord, Pfal, 119, 1, where also this Bleffed, as here in the words alledged by St. Paul, is twice repeated to the same purpose, Bleffed are they that keep bis testimanies, &c. and what is all this, but to describe the blessednesse, according to St. Pauls inference, of him that worketh? It will be faid, perchance, that Davids purpose was to describe, as in those party perchance, that Davias purpose was to destrote, as in those words alledged by St. Paul, Evangelical, fo in thefe, Legal beliefunder, herein differing, because the one grounded upon Faith; and the other, upon Works. But this though we allow offs, in due place; yet that David by those words intended the description of different blessednesses, we cannot allow. Our reason is, because this difference of words may be observed in St. Paul alfo, whose aim certainly was not to establish divers, sometimes Legal, and sometimes Evangelical, but one, and the same blessed nelle. What can be more plain, then what is at large, and with much vigour of expression delivered by him upon this subject, Rom. 2. 6, 7.8c. That, God will render to every man according to his deeds: To them who by patient continuance in well doing, Je glory, and bonour, and immortality, eternal life: But unto them that are contentions, and do not about the state of the st are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteoufneffe, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguist, 8cc. as followes there, verf. 9 and 10. Store of other places there is, to the same purpose, which I forbear, because obvious enough. Hence we conclude, that it was not Sr. Pauls purpose absolutely to deny, that conclude, that it was not of, rains purpose aroundery orange the bleffednelle came by good works allo, which both David and him elfel elfewhere fo clearly teach: but his aim here being to these the formal cause of blessedness; from this blessedness; or, to the formal caule of bleitednelle; irom this bleitednelle; or, to fipcak more properly, from this confideration of bleflednelle, he excludes works; faith and works being in this case opposite, which otherwise, in point of bleitednelle abolutely confidered, are info-parable. And because as David describes bleflednels by righten-nelly, and holinelle of life; so also, by more imputation of right outside; by more more about the patiently be grounded this difficultion of the formal, or efficient; and the infrumental cause of blefle-nelle: he makes use of rithan toffice, which was on his nector and nesse: he makes use of that passage which was to his present purpoe, leaving it to his reader, by comparing of differing place, to diffuguith, as we have done, and so to reconcile both local David, and himself) unto themselves. We might also diffinguith of works, which may be considered either as our own, that is, of works, which may be connected either as our own, man hilling from the power of our free wills, fuch as is left us fine Adams fall; to which certainly no bleffednesse doth belong; or, as the works of grace, and the effects of our spiritual regeneration: une wortes of grace, a mat the effects of our lipartual regeneration; which p openly be Gods works, because wording it must jo far as good, by his Spirit; rather then ours: a md in this fend the Appell Re might live, and that tooo, well according to Davids mind; that the spirit live and the spirit live an that bielednets comes by fairs, without works: as ne there speaketh. To this purpose he explains himself, Eph. 2.8, 9, 10, For by grace are ye faued through faith, &c. in which words he both excludes works, and yet faith, that we are created unto good works, and yet faith, that we are created unto good works, and Christ Tefin. Some Learned men are of opinion , that this Plame was made of purpole, to be used as a formula of a general consessiwas made of purpose; to be used as a Jornause or a general contract on of fins, on the foleran day of Expiation, appointed Levit, it, a day of great and publick humiliation, as we read there. That it might fit well, upon fuch a day, and perchance was used afterwards, I will eafily grant: but can hardly believe, by the tenor of the Pfalm it felf, that at first it was made for a publick occasion. on. V. 4. Let them be confounded and put to shame that seek after my soul.] From this verse, divers Imprecations follow; and there be divers Pfalms of the same argument, where David not content with ordinary termes, as, let them be confounded, &c. which with a little help of a charitable conftruction might passe: but with exquisite formes and speeches, (the like whereof are to be found in profance writings also) doth devote his enemies to the utmost of milery than his phansie could reach. Of all these in general, somewhat shall now he said; once here for all. Whether private revenge were forbidden by the law or not, divers have been the conceits and apprehensions of men about it. But first of all, to cleer the terms that we are to use : by private revenge we do not understand a legal profecution of ones right, against unjust usurpation, or oppression; which indeed feems, even this also, to be forbidden to Christians; but feems onely, as by Learned Expositors is sufficiently cleared : by private revenge, we understand an alienation of minde, or bearing of malice, watching any oppertunity to do mischiese by way ing on matter, watering any oppetition, of the imaginary, of an injury done to us. That private revenge in this fenfe, and fuch a malicious vindicative mind, was forbidden by the law, though, of maticious vindicative mind, was rotto-auen by use law, though, or old, otherwife interpreted by the Jewes, hath already been faid and shewed, upon Pfalm 26.6. so will I compasse thine attar. Which may be further confirmed by that of Job, where he professes his insport after Commined by Chat of Job, where he proteinen his innocency from fins of an high nature, as idolatry, &c. If Projected, faith he, at the definition of him that bated meyn lift up my foule when coul found him, Job 31.29. See upon Plal, 41.0. that I may require them. Not to speak of Prov. 22. 22. and other places there to that purpole, because written, or at least collected, fince David, Neither s the law of God, contrary to the law of Nature herein, if rightly is the raw of Son, contrary to the raw of statute nerein, it rightly confidered. The way that fome ancient Philosophers have gone, to prove that revenge was against Nature, is by shewing that it is against the common good, which they hold every man, as he is a raional fociable man is naturally bound to prefer before his own But this is of an higher contemplation. In a more plain way, among chriflians, at leaft; as I conceive, the same may be done. For granting that every man, by nature, is to love himself best, and to prefer his own good, before any others: (wherein religion & reason agree well enough, if in the word love there be no militake; that is, that we take not love of the body, and of this present world, for love of the foul, and of eternity) and that absolutely, or generally, it is lawful, as it hald a certify J and that another you generally a to sawin, as a half always been held a dictate of nature, y min virefuler; and by confequence, to requite evil for evil, left by bearing one injury, we expose our left yest to a fectod vert this mult be granted also, and it necessarily followes upon that first principle, That E dashus malis minimum: of two evils nature doth prompt to make choice of the least, Upon this very principle of nature, the Epicureans (as may be feen in Dio, Laertijs, and others) who pretended nature in all things, taught that we should forbear many pleasures, to which nature doth lead; not as pleasures, but as the cause of greater evils. Hereupon it will follow, that as many as believe, that there is a reward of good to them that keep the Commandements of God, either in this, or after this life, of far more valuable confideration. then the pleasure, or profit of revenge can be; as also a reward of evil to them that do not, much more to be feared, then any evilor inconveniency that can come to us, by neglect of revenge, and forgiving of injuries: it will, I fay, upon their grounds of nature necellarily follow, that fuch as love their own good, by nature; and as rational creatures (which is the proper nature of man, by which he differeth from bruits; reason) know, that they are not

13. 4. and of his own temper and dilposition, as may be gathered by divers circumstances, meek and mild; so freely to indulge to paffion (a man would think) even to dreadful curies and impreca-tions? It is commonly fuld; that what he uttereth in this kind, was nttered by him rather as a Propliet, and Gods Minister, then as a nttered by him rather as a Proputer, and Coos Minuter, then as a party, and out of any private paffion. Again, that David had not a respect to himself to much, if at all, as to the glory of God: the punishment of the wicked much conducing to the promoting of religion, and repreffing of wickednelle and vice among nien. That Daw.d. uttered many of these imprecations as a Prophety immediately moved by God, without any respect to himself, but with a respect to moved by God, without any rupect to immert, but with a relieft to God, and his gloy, I verily believe it. Certainly, anany of thole imprecations, with fome alteration of the tenfes, (which in the Hebrew tongue is ordinary enough) for the Optative, or imperative, being put in the Future; of imprecations would become meer propeng put in the ruture; or imprecutions would become meet pro-phelies. And fo we find fome fome of them expressed, as Psal. 21. puenes. And to we mud tome tome of them exprence, as 12al, 27, 8, 9. Think band fluid findent, Sec. Thus fluid made them on as fery year, Sec. But whether all, without any mixture of any humane paffion, or any reflect to himfelfe at all, (as is commonly affi med) I cannot so easily be perswaded. This I observe, that David, in most of those imprecations, pitches upon one kind of men, of all men in the wold, both to God and men, most hateful: rather Devils, indeed, then men; for whom whether it be lawful, or no, to pray, I'al-moft make a queftion: not that I think their fin to be the fin against the Holy Glody, but of all fins, the most industries a gainty common nature, and which by God himself (as shall appear) userly to be referred and unsided in a peculiar manner. It is the fin of un-compassionness of treelening cruelty, when men taking the advantage of others milery, pursue vengeance to the utmoff, and still the lower their enemy is and the more uncapable to relift, the more their rage and malice increaseth against him. This is much; but there is a degree beyond this, when a man doth this to another, not our of any revenge, or provoked by any wrong or in jury, either reall, or imaginary: but of pure crucky, and pleasure that he takes in doing mik hief, and to fee others in mifery. And yet beyond this too, there is a degree, when a man doth this, not to his enemy; nor to them, is a aggree, when a man aout this, not to his quondam friend, yea and benefactor. But let us hear David himfelf, how he describes them, In the 99. Pfalme, after deadful imprecations, as any be in the whole Book, Because, faith he, that he remembred not 10 shew mercy, whole Book, Becaufe, laith he, that he remembred not to flow metry, but perfected the poor and needy man; that he might even flight better professed the poor and needy man; that he might even flow the new to be not a second to the new the new to the new the new to not to pere in this Plaim we are now upon e ver, 11, 8C. They re-warded me evil for good, to the footing of my foul. But in for me, 8C. But in mine adverfut they retyized, and gathered themselves together, 8C. A man would wonder, that the nature of man should be capable of fuch lavagnefic: Though if Poets may be credited, they are but the bafeft of wilde beafts neither, that are of that nature. Corpora magnanim fatis eft proftraffe leoni, &c. At lupus, & turpes in fant morightibus urfi : Et quacunque minor nobilitate fera eft. And again, Nec mala te reddunt mitem; placidumque jacenti Noftra quibus poffunt illactrimare fera ? But the experience of all ages is above all reasoning. But let us see what God himlest doth think of such, and what account, He whose judgement must be our rule and warrant, would have us to make of them. I will pass by divers passages of the Prophets where dreadful judgements are denounced against several Prophets where dreadrul juggements are denounced against everal nations for this one thing, (though not in that only fifful), its likely) because they included without mercy, at the fall and ruine of their enemies. There be divers in that kind. I will ground my obfervation upon wife Solomon his words and observation to this purpole, which well deferves to be confidered of. He gives counsel how a wife man fliguld carry himfelf, when his enemy is brought low, if not quite loft, by the hand of God, Rejoyce not, faith he, when thine enemy falleth, and let not thine heart be glad when he stumbleth. Lest the Lord see it, and it displeuse him; and he turn away his wrath from him, Prov. 24, 17, 18. In which words, the opposite term, in te, (from him, upon thee) must of notessity be supplied, as it is well supplied by some Translators in the very Text; (as Junius sor one) and by fome Rabbins, in their Annotations upon the place, ir must be so, except: a man can think, that Solomons intention was, to give counsel, how to prevent, lest by our meanes the wrath of God against our enemies should be allayed : which to think, of God against our chemia both be arrived when a solution were as ablurd, as it is uncharitable. See also upon Prov. 25, 21, 22. If this entwer be bungry, &c., where we shall shew how much some are mistaken in the sense of those words. Now it Solomon were in the tight, and miltook not in his judgement of Gods nature, Ict any body, judge what a fin this must be in the eyes of God, this infulting, this rejoycing, at the columnity of the diffrested and afflieted, which alone can make an innocent of a finner, and finner of an innocent; by making him an object of compassion, who before was an object of wrath; and him an object of wrath, who before, was an object of wrath; and mm an object or wrath, who belore, but for this immerciful infulting, was of favour? I know not whence they had it, but this I know, that ancient wife heathers had the very fame apprehenfons of Gods nature, in this particular, as wife Solomon here exprelles: and that they Ipeak of it in the very wife Solomon here exprelles: and that they Ipeak of it in the very fame termes almost, as Solomon doth. Since therefore, both by fame termes almolf, as solomon dorn. Since theretore, both by the tellimony of Solomon, and by the common apprehension of min, none are more dubject to the curfe of God, none more deterlable to him, then fach kind of men, there is left! oftence to be taken at these curies of David against finch; and the more likely it ken at these curies of David against finch; is, (besides what we are bound to believe of it, upon another consideration) that the glory of God was his aim, in cursing those, fideration) that the glory of vou was mis ann, in curing thole, that he knew to God, of all men, the most accurfed: and in the punishment of whom. God he knew would be most glorified. But that he uttered these curses without any passion at all, (taking But that he uttered there unres wanted any pamen at any (taking paffion in the better fenfe, as an effect of nature, from which no natural man is altogether exempt) is more then I think my felfe bound to believe. Ancient Greek Philosophers tell us of a certain which they call 'Houredy # 29 : the proper paffion of Heroes, or Heroick men. It is, as they describe it, an illimited or unbounded liberty of language, in point of reproof and re-prehension, not tied to circum lances either of time, or of place. And this they make the priviledge of Heroick men, because of their trans endent virtue above other men. Certainly, had Davld as a meer min, (not inspired I mean) used these imprecations, yet we were bound to believe, that a man of such extraordinary parts, and otherwise fo meck and so charitable, had good reason for what he did though we have no warrant at all either from Reason, or Scripture, to imitate him therein, or to take the same liberty. Yetl. 1. The transgression of the wicked skith, within my heart]

The order of the words in the Original Hebrew, is fomewhat perplesd, and intricate; which makes Interpreters to vary much in their translations, though they agree well enough about the main foop. There be that expound it thus; Transsgression, (or cultom of finning, or, inbred corruption :) faith to the wicked ; that is, prompts and perswades him, (within my heart ; that is, in my conscience it is so: I verily believe it;) to put away all fear of God from before his eyes, Certain it is, that a loofe licentious life, breeds in a man, though better perswaded before, sooner or later, atheisticil opinions; nothing more : as a religious life disposes and prepares a man, as much as any thing to embrace the truth of God. But the amanas much as any thing to embrace the truin of God. But the more received exposition is, (whether, as shere we read it, the trassperfign of the wicked, faith. &C. or, as some, Transperfign of the wicked, faith. &C. or, as some, Transperfign of the twicked, &C. of that as the tree may be known by the fruit; so as atheist, by his life and convertation. Within my heart, shith Daniel and the state of the st vid that is, as before, I verily believe it. Or, perchance he opposeth the secret thoughts and suggestions of his heart, to open and confident affeveration. For many things we may believe, upon good grounds, and probabilities; which yet to speak openly and publickly, were both undiferget, and uncharitable. There is no question, but according to the phrase and doctrine of the Scriptures, all men that live irreligiously, may be called and accounted infidels and atheifts; but a legal formal atheift is another thing. Many things hould be confidered and known, before we take upon us, openly moile de confiderea and known, detote we take upon us, openly and peremptorily, to charge any man of atheisme.

PSAL XXXVII.

Verl. i. FRet not thy felfe because of evil doers, &c.] The argument of this Plaine, is a beaten argument; a vindication of Gods providence concerning the proflective of the wicked, and the afflictions of the godly in this world. It is an argument that hath been handled by many Philosophers of old; by Sencea, a Latine Philosopher, Cur bonin male sit, &c. among the rest, to the ur-most of what could be said by a heathen, singularly well: and since noted of what could be take by a necatively integrately well : and nince that, by many Chriftians. There is not any fubble ithinded, of either more confequence, or profundity: and could all feruples and doubts be well refolved, to the farisfaction of common capacities, as well as of others; it would make a great alteration in the world, and lives of men; vice would not be fo predominant, and virtue more in request. Yet among Christians, throughly and really possest with the principles of faith, as of the immortality of the point with the promotes of the body, a day of ju genient, and the like; the matter is of no difficult resolution; if any so principled, are much scandalized, it is not so much because they cannot be satisfied, as because they will not take the pains, or allow themselves time to confider of it ferioufly. Many alfo cannot be fatisfied, not through any defect, either of information, or understanding, but of a godly mind and life. Lewdnesse and profamesse, when once they possess the heart, they either put out the light of the understanding, or at least hinder the fruit and operation of it. But we are not here to treat of providence in general, but onely to consider what David faith of it, what against it, and what for it. He handles the point in another whole Pfalme, befides this: the 72. Therefore is Christ said, to have brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel, 2 Tim, 1.10. and Matth, 11.11. that he that is least in the Kingdom of Heaven, is greater then John then in virtue : and that all men of authority, Lawmakers, and others, should be bound, upon all occasions, to avouch it for a truth, the Baprift. Not but that of old , long before that time, there was that good men were happy men, and wicked men unhappy adding,
That if it were ever lawful, or laudible, for a man upon any occafomewhat intimated in the Law and Prophets; and talked of among the godly Iews to that purpole; but not any thing clearly, fion to Iye (which elfewhere he shewes and maintains, that it is not:) it was upon this occasion. And whereas it is there objected, that well men might write, or speak to; bur it could not be so calle nor with any certainty : of the wicked especially, that they also thould rife again, and give an account of their lives, and accordingly be rewarded; this was a thing not known then, but the to perswade : he takes upon him to maintaine, that if the matter were carried as in might be, it was feacible enough to perfusadamen, that it is fo indeed. And in very deed, his reasons at legations to that purpole, are very pregnant and pertinent and Aridotte, one of his distincts, that wrote fince him, stem to confirmit fundational and the standard of the standar contrary rather believed; as at this day among the Jews. Howcontrary rating periode as a truis day among the Jews. Frow-ever, that fucha one as David, fogodly, and so beloved, had a far greater knowledge of these things, then ordinary Jewes; and in some respect, then ordinary Christians, perchance; I make no question. But what he knew or believed, is one thing; and what to confirme it, speaking in a place of the power that Lawmakers have to persyade men even what they would themselves, though he thought fit for common knowledge, another. But how for ever? That is, successively, continued in their posterity. So indeed we find it exprest in some places, as in this very Plalme ver. 28. For by thesa words so often repeated, to dwell in the land ; to inherit the land, or, the earth, ver. 3, 9, 11, 22, 29, 34. yea for evermore, ver. 18, 27, is properly and literally intended not every land, but the land of Canaan, which was a type of the Kingdom of heaven. Varia circa hecppinio, ex Ingenio cujufque vel cafu: faith Pliny very well in a place, speaking of a much controverted matter. In this very point of providence, of the happinesse or unhapinesse of the righteous, &c. in this world, men of good judgement and ex-perience, speak very differently, differently deciding the matter according to their own experience, which according to variety of times and places (belides other circumftances) may vary very much. But in general, to make the observation as general as it can be made; it must in the first place be observed, that all such, either speeches, or promises, must alwayes be understood with an exception of times of general calamities, and inundations, as it exception or times so general calamities, and infinitely were: for then (in point of fuffering) all men, both infit and unity end innocent children, as others, are (for the most part) equally involved. V. 36. Tet he passed away, and lo he was not] The transitoriness and vanishing condition of wicked profering men, as here by David, and elsewhere; fo by Job (by them that speak there in Job I mean) is largely present and institled upon, Job 10, and elsewhere. mean 1 is sargery present and insured upon, 100 10. and elewhere, Now this transferorinelle being, for the most part, as true of the prosperity of the just, as of the unjust, why here more particularly applied to these, see before upon the first and second verses. Here alfo, in further confirmation of the same, it may be observed, that the very word here used, to passe away, is the word both by St. Paul, and St. John, used to set out the vanity of all worldly pomp and and St. John, used to let out the vanity of all worldly pomp and glory, in general. A very proper word indeed it is to that purpose, as any that can be thought of. St. Pauls words, I Cor. 7, 31 are, For the fashion of this world passet away. Where the word gana, or fashion, is to the same purpole, a very pregnant and emphatical word, as by Greek Interpreters is excellently well shewed. St. Johns words, are not leffe emphatical, 1 Joh. 2. 15, 16, 17. Love not the world, &c, For all that is in the world, &c. And the world paffeth away, and the luft thereof: it follows, But be that doth the will of God, abideth for ever. But there, (the end of that man were, in it would be very improper to take it for . no reason therefore that we should seek a new interpretation here, which the sense requireth nor; and would make the coherence worfe. The fame word TITTIN, fignifics alfo reward, as Prov. 23. 18. For furth there is an end, and thine expediation shall not be cut off. So there in there is an end-shat time expectation point not be cutt off. So there in the Text; but in the marging, remard: as by others also it is expounded. And so read in the Tellament is taken sometimes. This I note the rather, not that the difference it fells, whether end, or remard, is much confiderable; but the better to compare thefe words of David, with a parallel place of St. Pauls; taking the next verse also, (part of it ; But the salvation of the righteons is from the verte allo, i, part or it, fan the sprutino of the rightent, if from the Lord, a party: The words of St. Paul are the lets; for the magel of fin, it death: (here, the end of the wrived flutthe one of ;). So fome leatned on a night continue by request remaindrance. So some learned men here, who though they pleafe themselves in it, and would not by no meanes that "Diffin." Here should be the beginning of some known Song, as elsewhere in divers other titles other words, according to common opinion, which themselves are not against According to common opinion opinion, which transfer a dead against Yc. I know no ground they have for it, but their own conceirs to which if we may indulge here, why may not others upon other titles? which most of best Interpreters dislike: as before hath been faid, more then once, upon divers titles. But they that fend us to 1 Chron, 16. 4. Exod. 30. 10. as, besides that accurat English Examiner of words, and Scripture phrases; I finde learned Died. doth, (but that his quotations are misprinted in the late Folio edition, and would trouble a man that had no in the later Folio edition, and would troubte a man this had no other help: 1 they may well be thought to fiped to the juried, and upon good ground, as I conceive. For first in that fifty plee, I Clivon, 16. 4. And he appointed certain of the Levites to imight before the Arky of the Lord, and to record ("D-IPTY") and to kind; and to praife the Lord God of Iffrast: there we have the very word, that is here; englished (and for might have done her well) or this that is here, there: for the help and benefit of them, that cannot have encouring to the Osiginal Text; 1 wound Where cannot have recourfe to the O iginal Text:) to record, Whereby it doth appear that, as to thank and praile; fo to trend, was a particular Head, for which (as in all probability the words a particular risea, for which (as in air probability in affective to import,) certain soonies; Pfallines, Hymnes, or Prayers, were appointed. If any fuch; why not those, (but two in all in the whole book; this, and pfal. 70. Make haft 0 God, &c.) that bear that thile? I do not say, those onely; fince we finde but two: but those, certainly, that have that inscription. But this granted, that this title hath reference to that place; yet in may further be doubted, what is the effect and purpose of the words, to record; or, to bring to remembrance. We are told it is a phrase taken from sacrifices, wherein there were certain offerings named of menorial. So indeed, Exod. 30, 10. Levit, 2: 2, and 9, and elfewhere. This is likely: But then here again ne meet with new doubts, why those offerings were called, a menorial. Some say, because it called into Gods remembrance (speaking this by allowance, according to men) his covenant, to accept using anowance, according to men.) his coveriant, to accept the fervice of faith, which his people offer to thimby Chriff Much more is faid to the fame purpole, grounded upon allegorical interpretations, of the offer and frank-incertly, mentioned Levit, 2-. But not much to be collected from thence, that can be very presented by the control of the collected from thence, that can be very pertinent here. The words of the Angel to Cornelius, Acts 10. perment nere. The words of the Angel to Cottenins, real sole, any be as much, or more perchance, to our purpole: The prayers and thine almes are come up for a memoral lepine God. There also interpreters agree, that allufion is made to those ferings: To Gay, that this is the title of a plane composed by David to put. God in minde, that he may help him, &c, as fome the press of the control of the press of the control of the do hence: I conceive this to be too general. There is no que-fion but there is somewhat in it more then so. It is an expression of some great confidence, certainly; or of some pressing motives, in great extremity; but upon what especially grounded, is not easie to determine. By comparing divers Scripture places and phrases, especially psal, 10, 3, Remember all thy offerings, and accept thy burnt facrifice: () I there too, from the same 13 to remember :) I think it very probable, that David by this word and title, in this h's extremity (which is conceived to have been some great ficknesse,) doth put God in minde of his constant. Pfal. xxxviii. him in relation to it, which he was confident God had taken forcial notice of. Somewhat to this purpose we have in Hezekiah his prayer (and that too, upon occasion of sicknesse, and danger of immenent death) Remember now, O Lord, I befeech thee, how I have walked before thee in truth, and with a prefet theart, and have done that which is good in thy fight, Elay 38.3. Lord temember David, and all his afflictions: How he sware unto the Lord, &c. Pfal. 132, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. that too, very pertinent, as I conceive, to this purpose. See more there.

V. 3. reft] Heb. peace or, health. because of my sin] Here David goes the right way to obtain his defire, and to make his prayers availeable, when he reflects upon himselse, ascribing the cause of his misery, to his sins. Job 33. 23. lithere be a m-slenger with him, &c. and verse 27. if any say, I have sinned. &c. We may be sure, that God assists no man, but for sin; though there may be other concurrent causes for particular afflicti ons, as Gods Glory, or the like; and fometimes, fome bleffing intended to the patient himfelfe, as the confequent (as it doth fall out fometimes: Perinfem, nifi perinffem, &c.) of that affliction or the avoiding of fome greater evil. When therefore our Saviour faith of the blind man, so borne; that neither for his, nor his parents fins (John 9. 3.) that had hapned unto him: it must be unrents into (Joint 9.3.) that had hapted unto him. A man be didefilood comparatively, not unto him, rather, to others, becaule of his, (he could not be guilty of any, but original fin; common unto all :) or his parents fins greater then others: but that God, &c, as elfewhere in the cafe of them upon whom the Tower in Siloe fell, &c. our Saviour dorh expound himfelfe, Luke 13, 1, 2, &c.

Whether any ontward corporal disease, (whatever it was,) was the occasion of this Pfalme, as most ful ect, and divers words in this, and other verfes of it feem to import ; will not take upon me absolutely to determine. I am the more inclineable to believe it, because of the Title. See there. However, n must be confessed, that there be no words in the whole Pfalme, but may admit of a metaphorical interpretation, warrantable by wher places of Scripute, where the miferable condition of a fin-ner is fet out by corporal difeases: as particularly, Efay 1.53 6. The net is ter out toy corporat uneases; as particularly, 1:139 1.53, 6. Inc.

very iterally to import a corporal difease; this particular verse very iterally to import a may very well admit a metaphorical lense: and to that purpose the Greek translation (.d. 4δαι με βπλήσθησαν εμπαιγμαζίων) my lynes are filled with illusions, or contempt: fince that too, the Original will bear, would not perchance be much amille, A very like metaphorical expression to this (if we like to make a metaphor of it) we have Lament. 3. 13, 14. He hath caused the arrowes of hi driver to enter into my reines. I was a derifion to all my people, &c.

V. 8. I have roughly reason of the disputences of my heart. This trample warneth us never to delpair, be the torment never to great, but alwayes to cry unto God with fure trust, for deliverance, Pfal.

V. 9. Lord all my defire it before thee, and my groaning it not bid from thee] A great argument of a well-grounded faith, and a foccial comfort in affliction, to be confident, whilest we groan nuder milery, and have done to a long time; yet ftill to be confident, that God doth behold and fee: takes notice of our fufferings, our patience, our teares, our fighs: in a word, is present with us, as a zeale to his service, and more particularly of some things done by witnesse, and spectator; when as a helper, and deliverer, he seemeth furthest off. It doth adde much courage and valour to a Souldier, that is not a very raskal; even to put him upon extraordinary enterprises, and to endure more then can reasonably be expected; if his General or Captain be present, and takes notice of what he doth. Now from this, and other like places (fee also upon Psal. 33. 13. The Lord looketh) we may conclude, when David, as frequent-13. The Loranogen) we may concinue, when Lorangas trequent-ty, doth expolutilate with God, why he is ablem; if and the fire; hideth himfelfe, and the like; how he is to be underflood: There is no queffion, but he believed, when he fo spake; as he did here: but here speaketh simply and positively, as he believed; there, by a double figure, (α'εθεωποπάθα, and a metalepfis:) as common use, and language suggested. It is not possible that men (especially, in any passion, or affliction) should speak unto God, or of God, but in the language of men: and God doth allow of it: for Himfelfe (by a divine condescension) useth to to speak unto men ; yet fuch expressions have been the occasion of many grolle mistakes. Let them be confounded, &c. Much like to this, is that expression, in Gods own person, Deut. 32, 27. Were it not that I feared the wrath of the enemy, left their adverfaries should behave themselves strangly; that is, should be insolent, should insult, and magnific themselves; as the Chaldee there, and plal. 40.8. or unmercifully rejoyce without any fense of humanity, forgetting what relation all men have to one another by nature.

This sense may be allowed of, I grant! yet I rather prefer the former, as more literal, and not leffe proper to the coherence. But whereas it is here rendred in the future: I would have it (with most Interpreters) in the present, or preterir: I declare; and, I am forry: (or, I have declared, &c.) the words so taken asfording a doctrine very confiderable and ufeful; to wit that a man. a godly man, fuch a one as David was, may confelle, and be forry for his fins, and do whatfoever elfe doth belong to true repentance. and yet for all that finde no case or amendment; (as to the particular grief :) either not at all, whileft he liveth; which probably, sums girst. Jedathun] 1. Chr. 35. L.

Vete 1. I. Said t will tale head to my wayes] This Pfalme, if in Vete 1. I Said t will tale head to my wayes] This Pfalme, if in Medical things equally facred and divine, comparison may be made without offence, well deserved to have place among the chiefeft and choiceft of the whole one in few words, but very pithily of speciall use, and comprehending in few words, but very pithily and loftily too, the chiefest motives unto godlineste, and that which being well pondered, and understood, may suffice unto any man, without any further periwation, or exhoration; to bring him to Heaven. It is therefore yet frange to me, that fome Expostors (of best account) should to mistake the drift of the Pfalmist, as if his intention had been to make confession unto God of his sin, a sin of impatience, and over-bold exposulation with God; and that so of impatience, and over-bold expollulation with God, and that for punchually and particularly, that his very words which he had used unaswifely might hand upon record to all ages. A thing not very probable, a link plant and upon record to all ages. A thing had told us to fig. or end. But the ground of their miffake, as doth appear what is David, as he profetch at the beginning the Palme, had proposed to himfelf to take heed, that he might the Palme, had proposed to himfelf to take heed, what he might the Falme, nad proposed to immelt to take need, that he might not offend with his tongue. But not being able to hold,burst out at 14th, & fpakes himfel relateth. Upon which they infer, that what himfelf makes himfelt to have fpaken, must need so fuch, as should not have been spoken : and thereupon they feek out interpretations, of his words, to fit their purpole, which have no ground at all of any truth, or probability; as may eafily appear by comparing or any return, or pronountry; as may eamy appear oy comparing them (an eafe taske) with other like places of Seripture. A very great mithake, as I hope we fhall make clear; whether more reproachfull to David himfelf; or prejudiciall to the Reader, who by their falle glofles is bereaved of the fruit of his doctnine; I know by their falle glofles is bereaved of the fruit of his doctnine; I know not : What the aime of the Pfalmist was in this Pfalm, will more certainly appear, if we compare it with Pfalme 49. Hear this all ye people. That too, a most heavenly Pfalm, and of special use: as of one subject, so of one method, both, First they begin with a pretty large Preface, to make the matter more solemn and considerable: as the manner of all Orientall writers upon extraordinary fub jects as me manner or all Unitental writers upon extraoranary tup jects and occasions, hath been, and its or this day. Then, they fet out most emphatically and pithily, the vanity of all worldly things, the brevity of this our mortal life: 6 floors, for brittle, 6 foon forgotten, that no tife man, be he never for tich, or fo great, can promife the control of the control himself any solid happinesse in this world. Upon this conclusion, that this present life is nothing but meer wretchedness and vanity; the use, or inference in both Psalmes is the same, that they that would be happy, must look further then this world, and trust to God for future good, which may have the truth and reality, of good, or bappinesse; all mens ayme, and defire. But this is more fully exnathregie; all mens ayme, and delire. But this is more fully ex-pertified in the 4p. Palm, But God will redeem my fuel from the pow-er of the grave, for he fluil receive me: Selah: ((see there the nore) than it is here, (and yet here, plainly enough, according to the condition of thode times, and measure of light; whereof see upon Pala 471. Frent in he fel?) And now Early what wait I for? my hope is in hire: verife 7. See there. See allo upon the last words, here I so have and here mere. When therefore the Vlaimit Saish before Igo hence and be no more. When therfore the Pfalmift faith here in the Preface, that he purposed to take heed, that he might not fin with his tongue, &c. It tends but to this, (in this place:) to make his Reader the more attentive, and to raise an expectation of what he was to say. For if he that had made a vow of silence, as it what he was to lay. For h he that had made a vow of filence, a sit where accounting it greatwildom (as it hath always bin by wife men) that he could hold his peace, even when he might have fooken feafonably perchance; yet even then exercifed himself, as a man voyd of all ambition, and oftentation of wit, felf-conceit, and the voya or all amotton, and outertation or was tell-concer, and the like; to hold his peace; in great humility suspecting himself, left he might offend: if nevertheles a tere long silence, and command of himself, he was forced by a violent inward slame (that is, by divine instinct, and inspiration :) to open his mouth , and publickly to vent his thoughts: furely we may well expect, that it is no ordinary petty thing, that he will speak t but somewhat that may both argue his wildom, and be of some consequence to the hearer. Much to this purpole, but much longer, is the Preface of Elihu, in Job, Chapter 32.6.7. &c. And Elihu the son of Baraket the Buzite answered and said; I am young, and ye are very old; wherefore I was a fraid, &c. and faid; I am young, and ye are very out; wore river 1 was a fraid, &c. and verte 18.19. For I am full of matter, the spirit within me constrainted me to the other whole of the within the vent, it is ready to buff, &c. After his Preface our Plaimith his first words are: Lord burlt, &c. After his rectace our readmit his nite words are: Lord make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days what is it that I may know how frail I am: verse 4. Are these words of impatient nutrinuring against God, as some make them? Why more these, then fo many in the Scripture, as plaine and peremptory to that end? But what then is the drift? what is ir, that the Pfalmift doth aim at, by these wores? If the context of the words do not; (which I think it doth:) fufficiently import, we may learn from Moles Song, Pf. 50, where Moses having in very high terms insisted upon the vanity of man; he proceedeth in the 12, verse, in these words: Seteach us to number our dayer, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdome. And this is the way to much commended and infifted upon by an cient Philosophers and Wife men, in their disputations and commentations of mans funmum bonum; or, true happinelle, wherein it consistest: shewing very well, and with much evidence of reait consistent: incoming very well, and with much evidence of rea-fon, as well as eloquence, that it cannot be, that it flould be found in the injoyment of worldly goods: but in this, grolly militaking, most of them; that instead of going to God for it, in his beatifical Vision in another World : they place it in the soul of man, (terminative:) and in the natural constitution of it; endowed with minative:) and in the natural contitution of it; endowed with fuch and fuch qualities; making a very god of it; which to make good, for much hath been written by for many men of excellent parts, with fo much eloquence, and fubrilty, as indeed cannot be read without admiration of their parts; and yet to very little purpole, as to finding of any thing, that can really fatishe the foul of pole, a to making et any thing, that can really lattike the loul of man, in the purfuite of fold happinethe.

"N. 5. Many, O Lard my God, are thy wounderful works] The coherence of these words, with the following verses, is generally conteived to be this; First David insistent upon some particular mercy and deliverance, (the subject and occasion this Pfalm) of which ing very fensible, he proceedeth to a more general consideration of Gods infinite goodness and mercy towards mankind with great admiration, which he doth here fet out by way of exclamation, and being defivous to approve to God his thankful heart to the utmost of his power, he falls into a consideration of that worship and service, which he conceives would be to God most acceptable: not oblations and facrifices, which most Jews of those times, as well hypocrites, as others, upon such extraordinary occasions, were ready nough to offer ; but fincere and absolvte obedience, &c. This as l do not reject, but rather commend to others as probable and warrantable enough: So I conceive another reason may be given of the coherence, though not so obvious, yet perchance not less pertiment: which is thus; David being to fay, (as he doth in the fol-lowing verses) there was a way to serve God without the oblations and facrifices appointed by the Law, by yielding (fo far as corrupt nture is capable) perfect obedience to the moral Law; that is, in effect, by holinels of life and convertation; upon which followes, that in all Nations they that feared God, and did that which is that work righteousness) are accepted with him, Act. to. 35. a secret of Gods dispensation not so fully revealed in shose days; nor among ordinary Jews very readily entertained, when it was afterwards more fully divulged by the Gospel; David, therefore as a Prophet, partly; and partly as one, who for his extraordinary piety, and degree of favour, and acceptation with God, was made privy to the counsel and waies of God far above other men; before he deliver this doctrine, with admiration he begins with a contemplation of Gods wildom and goo incls in ordering the means of mens falvation: like as in the 50 Plalmallo, being to treat of the famo mattery he begins with Yee yellotting properties of the lame mattery he begins with Yee yellottin preface, futable to the nature of the thing. See the application of thefe words of David, and by the Apolle, Heb. 10-5, 6-7. &c. they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee] Or, none can order them unto thee. V. 6. mine ears hast thou opened] It passeth for currant among all Expositors of our times, both of this and the former age, that David by these words, doth allude to the law concerning servants Exod. 21. 6. and his mafter shall bore his ear through with an awl and he shall serve him for ever, One onely (but of the most considerable) I find, who calls it coallam arguttam. True it is, that the law speaketh but of one car to be bored; and here we have the plural, ears. Whence we may well infer, to which the very context doth also lead, that David had a further aim and meaning, of Gods sitting him for hearing, (fince by hearing, especially comes believing, &e. Rom. 10, 14, 17.) by opening, not one of the two, but both his cars: to which purpote is that in Job also, Then he openeth, (or on, Job 32.26. yet fince obedience and conformity to the will of God (I delight to thy will, 0 my God, &c.) is not allo, only, but immediately spoken of and mentioned; it doth not follow but that he might, and is very probable that he did allude to that Law and Custome alfo. Besides that rite of boring there expressed. I would have those words also considered. And if that servant shall plainly Jay, I love my master, dyc. to which the word delight here might have some reference. And as for that observation of ear in the singular, in the Law; and of ears, plural, or dual rather here; we might perchance retort upon the author of it his own words of coalla argutia, fince that we had before out of Job in the dual, is afterwards repeated in the fingular, chap. 36. 10. He openeit also their ear to discipline; and ver. 15. of the same chapter. He delivereth the poor in his affilition, and openeth their ear (Heb. DIN as reth the poor in he afficients, and openess near car (recommend in the teach verfe ; shough here translated, or at least printed, ears) inoppression. These words of the Plaimist are cited by the Aposlic in his Brisileto othe Heb. 10, s. but there translated, a hody thou hast prepared (or; fixed) me. Whence and how came this distribution of the contraction of the contract ference, is a great question. Some of great account have thought it probable, that this alteration was made by the Greek Translators (whole Translation, because commonly then received, is often tols (whole framiation, secanic commonly then received, is orient followed by the Apoftles, and Evangelifts, though varying from the Hebrew) of purpose, that the Gentiles, at whole request it was first undertaken, unacquainted with this custome of boring the ear of fervants, might nor be offended. And because it was the fashion of the said Gentiles, to print some marks upon the bodies of their flaves'; they think the word of body was put instead of ear, to fit the expression better to their custom. But if offence were car, to it the expression offers to their cuttom. But it offence were the thing that was feared, I do not fee that this alteration could much help the matter, but rather make it worfe; fince that I do not read that fuch prints were wont to be made; but upon the bodies of rogues and fugitives, by way of ignominy and punish-ment; and not as fitting, or preparing the body for service. But we need not trouble our selves much about this alteration. For first (as the most learned of late have well observed) it came not from the Septuagint, it being a thing certain by the testimony of some antients, and the yulgar Latine, (expressed out of the Greek, as all know) to this day, that ancient Greek Copies of the Psalms had it wlia, ears, (as in the Hebrew) and not owna, abody. And there be that fay as much (fomethat have written upon the Epifile to the Hebrewes) of that passage of the Aposlles, that in some antient Copies it is found to this day office, and not σῶμα. But however, it is most probable to me, as to others of late, that this alteration was made by the Apostle himself; neither is it any alteration of fense, but onely the expression made a little more general, and easier to be apprehended by them that should not be acquainted with that particular of the Law, fhould not be acquainted with that particular of the Law, of boing the ear of Servants. The Hebrews, of one that was called (or at leaft, thought (o) by God to some extraordinary duty, or atchion, were wont to fay, (as before hath been said) that he was, so and so, (as separated, in Saint Paul, of himfelf prime with. See before upon Pfalm 22, 9, that took me out of the womb. It may be this alteration might have some reference to that ordinary speech. But it may be more con-siderable to us, and of more necessity for the right understanding of this Pfalme, to confider of the wo ds the Apostle useth, right and just before God, to the utmost of their power (or, as S. which this obculence may be received. Dut or ins obculence of fulf-ferings, I know nothing in the Law, but typically; and what is in the reft, to this purpole, is of a later date. And then for David, what shall be fail of him? Somewhat is said, I know, to this purpole; That although the precepts of the Law be general, yet every pole; I hat although the precepts of the Law be general, yet every godly man hath a particular interest in them, and may appropriate them to himself: which in some sense I know may be laid, but how to be applied to these words of the Pfalmith, so express and how to be applied to trace were as one training, to express and for emphatical in the designation of a particular person, (in the summe of the book it is written of me, Sc.) I do not see. The first therefore, that began to see the right, (if we fail not in our judgement our falve) are those, who by this volume of the book, and the summer of the book, understand a scroll or catalogue, wherein souldiers names were registred: Porro libri nomine Legem intelligi, &c. [That by the wolume of the book, the Law of God, which prescribes to all men how to live godlily, (or, which is the rule of godliness unto all men,) should be understood, I do not think absurd. But nevertheles I take this to be the more genuine exposition, that David there is a take this to be the more genuine expension, that David fhould profets him elf in eorum catalogo cenferi, to be of their number, enrolled by name, who yield obedience unto God!] So judicious Calvin upon the Epiffle to the Hebrews. Now this once granted, that by 100 1710 there is no necessity the Scripture should be understood, the words of themselves being general, which may as well be translated, in a volume of a book, as, in the which may as well be translated, in a volume of above, and that by AD any writings, evidences, bills, Court-rolls, &c. may be understood, as Deut. 24.1, and in divers other places; as no man makes any question, then I see nothing why this should not be thought the most literal and convenient interpretation, that David should make here a folumn protestation of his purposed absolute obedience unto God, as one protestation of his purpoted abilities obedience unto God, as one that were legally bound and obliged, by a written and register overants, or engagement. Verf. r. Blaffed is he that confidereth the poor] This Translation is defective '17000 is not simply, that confidereth; but that wifely confidereth; qui prudenter judicat: as Molleurs, Calvin, and others, here: and this very Translation, Pfal. 64, 9. Cavin, and outers, meet: and this very trainitating, that, o.4., 9, 4 and all men flull flew, and flull declare the works of God 5 for they flull wifely confider (1770-07) prudente confiderabina, vel 5 expendent: a Some therein, 4 bit doile. Neither is, is, but confiderable the por; but, 77 TN Giper eggent to enterring the por; that is, (according to both Expositors) that judgeth not rashly othis cafe, that he is poor and afflicted, because wicked and hazed of God. This (the fufferings and calamities of good and godly men in this world) is a mystery of Gods providence, which they that do not understand, are much scandalized at and either conclude that there is no God, or they not godly, that are afflicted. But wife men make wery good use of it. For knowing even by sense, (by the sight of his works) that there is a God; and if a God, in common sense and reason, that he must be a just and a good God; (all which even by ordinary heathers and Philiosophers hash been acknowledged) hence their faith of a future Judgement, and another world after this, is further confirmed, because they see not, that in this world, eight ther bad or good fare according to their deferts, and according to the dictates of ordinary justice and providence, See Pfal, 92.6. the Lord will deliver him] Not him, that considereth (though of him too, it is true enough, That he that judgeth of others in their miseries charitably, may expect charitable judgement both at the hands of God and men, Mat. 7, 1.) but him, that is, the poor, and afflicted. So best Interpreters. So that Davids aim in these words is to comfort the afflicted (whether himfelf, or any other) and to professe his faith and considence in that particular, of Gods merciful dealing towards them that fuffer, in crowning their fufferings with a joyful and glorious issue. And besides, it is a good motive to others, to induce them to judge charitably, that God, in due time, will raife and reftore them, whom for a while he hath cast down. Which nevertheless is to be understood of Gods ordinary providence, and manner of dealing (in those times especially) for the most part : not to extend to extraordinary cases and examples, when God for hidden reasons, prolongs the afflictions of the afflifled, even to the last; providing them a proportionable reward after this life. In this case, Gods del iverance must be understood of that, more then ordinary, patience, (of all worldly bleffings, in the judgement of many antient Philosophers, the best and choicest) and those spiritual comforts, which God doth vouchsafe to them that are fortyed and put to it, to be examples of patience unto others. hath lift up his heel against me] Like a wilde horse, to kick at me, or trample me under foot.

V. 10. That I may require them] This open profession of David, of his intended revenge, hath troubled Interpreters, both Jews and Christians. Jewish interpreters ; though for the most part they allow of revenge, nay think it a vertue; yet they are troubled how to reconcile these words with those Plai, 7, 4, If I have rewarded evil, &c. They have devised many waies of recon ciliation, avoiding the literal fense; nay gathering a quite contrary, that I may requite them: that is, say they: that I may render unto them good for evil: which indeed may be deemed a good der unto them good tot evil; which indeed may be decined a good and godly mans way of revenge; commended unto us, nay commanded by Christ and his Apostles; and even by some antient heathens much approved. I find, that some very learned Christian Expositors profess themselves very willing to embrace this sense: yet fo, as a man may fee by their very words, that it is rather their good will, than their judgement : or if it be, then (to fay nothing of their willingness, against their own light, if it should be so which of the two may be the worft, and more derogato y to the Scriptures) I must profess against it. The tenour of the words is against it, besides what may be objected from other like places in the Pfalmes; and the confent of all other Interpeters. Neither is it a hard thing to reconcile David to himlelf. For he might be the fame man, and yet not alwaies deal, at all times, and with all forts of enemies, and upon all kinds of offences and provocations, in the same kind. The observation of circumstances is a main point of justice, neither is our justice only to be guided by it, but our mercy also: else, mercy may prove rigor sometimes, as well as rigor (a thing observed, and amply declared by antient philosophers) mercy. But what if David were not the fame man neither, in point of execution; and yet fill the fame in his own mind, and merciful inclination? that is; a private man before, wholly to be guided, asrigor, or mercle should prevail, by private interests, and considerations: and now, a publick man, a magistrate, a King, a minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doth e-vil: Rom. 13.4. So that neither Jews nor Christians, need to take offence at these words, if we say that David speaketh here as a Ki ig not as a private man. But it is added, that he speaketh also as a Prophet, by a particular warrant from God himself. But after all this, it must be added, that though private revenge was even by the Old Law declared against, (whereof see upon Pfalm 26.

6. So I will compair, &c. and Pfal. 35. 4. Let them be confounded, 6. 30 In III compay & C. and Fial. 35. 4. Let intern be conjournaed, & C. to which may be added, Dent. 32.35. To me belonger to vergeance, & C. as expounded and applyed by St. Panl. 7 Rom. 12. 19. and Heb. 10. 30.) and forbidden! Yet not fo clearly and generally forbidden, as to us Christians, by Christ our Lawgiver. As we have no reason therefore to expect such preciseness of words in this case, from them that lived under the Law; so neither can we draw any consequents from their examples, if such offer themselves unto us, that can justifie us, or excuse us, against the cleer dictates and this tract can justice us, or excess us, against the excess of makes and decisions of the Copferl, without doing great injury to the Name, whereby we are called, and for which, if we rightly understand the worth of it, nothing should be hard, or grievous unition us, V. 10. By this I know that then favourest me] Pfal.86, 17, show me a token, Scc.

By this I know that thou favourest me, because mine enemy] This had need as much caution, as the words before, now last spoken of : or rather more. We must take heed therefore that we take them not as absolutely delivered, and make a general doctrine of them, which are intended here by David in reference to his particular cafe at that time : and not without respect perchance (as some chief Interpreters are of opinion :) to some particular promise; which God had made unto him, upon the accomplishment whereof, after long and anxious expectation, he might well infer, that now he knew that God in very deed, according to his promife, did favour him, &c. For otherwise we know, that it was once Christs own case, to be delivered into the hands of his enemies, and to hear the revilings and reproaches of profane people, He nufted in God : let him deliver him, if he delighteth (so ought the words to have been rendred : see on Pfal. 22. 8) in him : Matth. 27. 43. from whence, (laying the mystery of our redemption by Christs death aside, since that, as he suffered for our justication, so for our example too:) we learn that it may be the case of the most religious, whether Prince or Prelate in the world, to fall into the hands of his enemies, and by them to be entreated at their pleafure, even unto all extremity either of pain, or of ignominy. Now on the other fide, if any shall make this an argument of Gods, favor, To prevail against an enemy, and to be successful in enterprises; without any further confideration either of the cause, or of the perfons, and their condition; and this upon warrant of these words of David: let them remember where they be, who by David elsewhere are faid, To boaft of their hearts defire , Pfal. 10. 3. not to infift (because obvious enough) upon other like expressions and testimo-nies either of Davids, or any others of equal authority. The word, Amen, at the end of prayers (as of bellings and curfes, Num. 5, 22. and elsewhere) implies a concurrence of wishes and affections; and is also an expression of a confidence, that it shall come to pass coordingly. Twice repeated, as here, it makes the speech more pathetical. But at the beginning of fentences, as Mat. 24. 47. and elsewhere, it stands for an affeveration, and is as much as, verily, verily.

Now whicher by deep, in the words before, he intends these showres and stoms from the clouds, Or the billowes and rowlings of the fea in great tempefts, is not cafie to determine. The word aby flus, is more proper of the Sea, and such secret receptacles of water, as are conceived to be under the earth. The other sense feems the more proper to the coherence. But to the main matter, either, is indifferent : the one as proper as the other. If by deep we understand great thunder showres, there will be (which will make the whole the more acute and elegant) fome reference between calleth, and noyse; those showers that consecutively (as it often falls falls out) follow one another after every thunder clap, being as it were called for by the noile of the thunder,

This holy method of expostulating with God, upon grounds of his former love and fayour, (upon which a tacite inference, that .God will not utterly cast them off, to whom he hath been so good and gracious, is to be cait them on, to whom he nath been to good ann gracious, is to be prefuppoedly you may observe essentials, as Plasses, where, to veile 38. Gods love and gracious promifes to David, his people and posterity, are largely fet out: then follows, as here, a large expoltulation concerning their present estate, contrary to those forexpotulation concerning their present entate, contrary to those for-mer favours and promifes. Thus godly people fittre up themselves in their extremities, to hope against hope: and besides, it becomes them well, in such cases, not so abruptly to begin with complaints, which might favour of murmuring; but after fuch infinuative expressions, as might show their interest in God, and Gods in

V. 17. All this is come upon us, yet have we not forgot] What is here spoken, in this and some following verses, must not be underflood as intended for a juftification of themselves by a general pro-fession of their innocency; which whether more false and ridiculous to imagine (as being spoken of the generality of the people, which certainly, when at best, were not without faults that might deferve judgements;) or whether more impious (as implying a charging of God with injuffice) I know not. That which they intended by the words, is, to justifie themselves from the heinous fin of Idolatry: profeffing, that notwithflanding God might feem in a manner to have forfaken them, having delivered them into the hands of Idolaters, from whom they fuffered all manner of perfecution; yet they had not forfaken him in that kinde, as to prove Idolaters, but rather submitted to all manner of torments and cruel deaths, then to be drawn unto it. And this is it, which both by Josephus the Jewish Historian, by S. Jerome, and divers others, is observed, (being indeed well worth our observation) that the Jews, fince the return from the Babylonish Captivity, never fince relapsed (to which before that they had been so obnoxious) to Idolatry. It doth also appear by the New Testament, that they were not guilty of any luch thing in those dayes; for neither is it charged upon them by Christ, or his Apostles, any where. It is very likely that this Pfalm hath reference to those times and things related in the Macchabees, where much is recorded of the fufferings of the the water naces, where means recorded or the inherings of the guilty before God, and deferve dreadful, judgements, yea deftudion, for other crimes then Idolatry: a thing which many in the dayes would little think, who if they can acquit themfelyes of Sunanting the control of perstition and Idolatry, or that which they call Superstition and Idolatry (which sometimes is more in their imagination, to which Idolatry (which concernes is more in their imagination, to which they are extremely addiced, then where they would have it-thoughts, by lamentable, but groundlefs outcries) make themeleves fure enough of Gods favour, though guilty of many foul vices, as Piole, Perjury, Goveroufnefs, (which is Idolatry, Col.3. 5. that is, as bad before God, as Idolatry it felf; nay, and very near to Idolatry in its nature, Job 31.24,25,&c.) V.21. Shall not God fearch this out?) They take God to witness, to make their protestation of their innocency in this kinde, the more folemn and confiderable. And fo we may fafely, without fear of taking Gods holy Name in vain, when it is in a matter of con-fequence, and that we may do it with a clear conscience; which doth presuppose a serious examination of our own hearts, which otherwise are apt enough to deceive us, or the Devil, rather, them, if g eat care be not taken. But in point of Idolatry, this appealing to God, the fearcher of the bearts, is the more seasonable, because we reade in the Law of a twofold Idolatry, publick and apparent, fer down, with the punishment of it, Deut.13.12,13,14

Along of love! Of the love betwixt Solomon and Pharaolis daughter, typifying the love of Chrift and the Church; or, of the beloved ones, kings daughters attending on the bride, ver. of the lebrow it is "ITTITI TW and because Solomon was in the lebrow it is "ITTITI TW and because Solomon was in the lebrow it is "ITTITITI TW and because Solomon was in the lebrow it is "ITTITITITI". called Jedidiab, as we read 2 Sam. 12.25. fome Rabbinds, and others, have thought that Solomon might be intended by this word. This is certain, that many fuch alluffors, with fome little alteration in the proper names, are to be found in the Seripture. See before upon Pfal.7. upon those words of the Title there, Cash the Benjamine; and upon the Title of the 9. Pfalm. But whatever we think of that word in the Title, a greater quenot winaccer we time or that word in the lates a greater gues-flon is made coherening the ingument of the Pfalm: If elf; which some are so far from yielding that it was composed upon Solomons marriage, and immodiately applyable to him; (though chiefy intended of Christ, as all Christians maintain) that they chiely intended of Chritt, as all Chriftians maintain) that they think it great impirety for any mait or think fo. The Genevinfer, de Sulmane are charged by Genebrard: Impit, at Genevinfer, de Sulmane hunc Pfalman exponents, faith he. Now his reasons with it cannot be loop the first his, because the sons of there, the authors of this Pfalm, as he takes for granted, did prophess in the time of Moles, many ages before Solomon. And though Prophets, yet that God would have Solomon an object of their prophets, yet that God would have Solomon an object of their prophets. phets, yet that God would have Solomon an object of their pro-phetic, rather then David, or any other, I confeits is not why likely, except we had more affurance of it. But what can Genebrard fay to us, why we chould believe, that thefe Jans of Corab here mentioned, lived in Mofes his time; whom all others conceive to have been of their potterity in Davids, and fince Davids time? S. Troote he many arther, how he have head the surface. S. Jerome by name, makes them to have been keepers of the doors, and several porches of the Tabernacle in Davids time, But this is a meet fancy of Genebrards, onely to ferve his prefent purpose, 2 That the expressions of this Plalm are more sublime, then to belong unto any terrestrial King: neither is this: lufficient argument, fince it is acknowledged, that Christ is chiefhalticient argument, ince it is aeknowleagea, tranc Larit is citier; yi intended, and that there be other Pfalins where as high things are spoken of David, immediately; though belonging to Cliriff more properly. A third argument, is, that the Apolites apply it to Cliriff. So they do divers other things, which nevertheless to the control of the contr it to Ciritt. So they do divers other things, which nevertheless were literally spoken of others, as all grant. Their application of things to Christ, doth not take away the literal sense. That it is against the sense or opinion of all Christians; (his fourth it is against the sente or opinion or all Christians; (his sourch argument:) how false that is, I will appeal to Lorinus, who though he name not Genebrard, we he names others that have faid as much as he, and confutes them by divers opposite authotaid as much as ne, and confuses them by uners' opposed author. Taking it therefore for granted, that Solomon was the immediate object and that this Pialin was intended to him as an Epithalamium, or Marriage-fong; I think their interpretation very probable, and almost unquestionable, who translating the words according to the most grammatical construction, carmen dilettarum, (for it a feminine) understand thereby certain choice virgins (accorda feminine) understand unercoy certain cnoice virgins (accord-ing to the cultions of those times) appointed to compals abour, or accompany the bride; and to fing this Pfalm, propelly called the beloved, or, the friend, as they that waited on the bride, groom, were properly called, is clear in propelly the friend, of the bridegroom, Joh. 3.29. though it be there in the fingular, $ $100, the friend; because S. Ointment and persume rejoice the heart? This as I conceive to be the most literal; fo I should fay, the onely true sense, but that I have no authority for it, but mine own. I leave it therefore to the Reader, to judge. But there be, and those of the most approved, as Diodat by name, that expound all this of Chrift, and make that the lireral, (though the expression be metaphoritcal) and immediate meaning, taking no notice of any other, in reference to Solomon, and his marriage. So here, by garment, &c., they interpret, the gifts of the Holy Ghoft, which spread forth a most sweet odour of grace and power; and out of the twory palaces that is, say they, from heaven, which is Christs royal habitation; make thee glad, namely, with everlasting and heavenly oy, Heb. 12. a But for my part, as I believe that Christ was the chief aim of the Psalm, in general, to see our by it, the glory of his kingdom, and the happiness of the Church by k, the giory of his kingdom, and the happiness of the Church, and of the Church to Christ; yet, my opinion, is, (and I fee most others of ours, most in request, go that way, who though they apply ir to Christ allo, some one way, some another, yet ground upon a literal Jense with reservence to Solomon;) that all particulars are not see well applyable to Christ, except we take much liberty: as for example, the particulars of this verse: at least, that they are not so properly applyable to Chilft, as to Solomon. Now if we go to al-legories, and remote applications, there is great liberty left to everegotes, and it will be very hard to pitch upon any thing, that every body will think to be proper and folid. As for example, others interpret these garinents, of the garinents of failuation, and the rabe of rightentines. Sugar 6.1.0. wherewith Christ doth-clothe his There is the concerning parties and the fragrams of the end of the fragrams of fivest finell of those garments they make to be the Evangelical Doctrine, concerning juffification and remission of sins in Christ. And then by these two y palates, some understand, not heaven, but beautiful and magnificent Churches received to the honour and glo y of Chrift. Thus every man may indulge to his fancies, and not exceed, perchance, the liberty of allegorical Expositions: but much beyond the compass, as I conceive, and purpole, of fuch Notes as thefe.

V.13. The Kings daughter is all glorious within? Of the mystical sense, or application, either to the Church in general, oftentimes tenes or application, either to the Chilten in general, oftentimes in the fight of God and his Angels 3 both in its living Saints, by their holy convertation 1 and in its dying Martyss, by their patient daths and fulferings in feveral kindes. Mel glorious, when most opported and trampled upon by men: Or to every particular inemoppresied and transport and excellency is not external, but internal, in the feveral endowments and qualifications of the foul, both natural and divine, or infused. Of this mystical sense and application, I fay, there is no question. It is very common, and ordinary, in all Writers, both ancient and late. But because I make this but the secondary sense, not immediately intended by the Prophet (whoever he was) and holy Penman, though chief in the intention of the Holy Ghost; we must inquire into the literal, of which of the Holy Choft; we must inquire into the literal, of which there is more question among Interpretez. Whithis, that is, not whe feen, whilet the Bride, is yet kept cloit, and expected abroad, by the company, with great extendents, (a good part of the Chemithy, according to the custom of whole times among the Hebritzs Steinger, in the present of the property of the custom of the Hebritzs Steinger Palleys. Whithis is as a bridgerom;) until the present of the property of the property of the property of the present of the Bridgerom; by whithis is as a bridgerom; chemically the property of the propert legorical, as the onely. But that which I like best, is yet behinde. towordinary is it, even among prophane Poets and Authors, to formare mental periections, with external beauty; and to preferre took as of themselves more considerable, and more lasting Formation. way 40 or themselves more connectable, and more laying exerma binut fraite by (one of then) quantimg steedil, 8c. / Jam marming addings, 8c. one literal lenfe, by faiher, shall be thy children] It is generally oncived, that these words are discreted unto Solomon himself, not white Bride, because of the Masculine assistance, or pronount, in the Original : and the fense to be this, that his posterity shall not denerate, but equal their fathers, in wisdom, prudence, piety, and generace, but equal their fathers, in wildom, prudence, piety, and all true nobility. Indeed if the words be directed to Solomon, I know not what elfe to make of them. But because it is not without example, that a Masculine should be put for a Feminine; as upon this very place is well observed by some; it were better, and chance, to take them as directed to the fame, to whom the lorest chaines, to take them assureeged to the lame, to whom the long-from v.to. (mot of them) are directed, or, at leaft, belonging wit, the Bride. So the meaning would be, which I conceive woulf fit the place much better, to perfivade her not to take too m teh to heart, (which many women in this case of marriage are apt tod , and fomeranes it is the taufe of much trouble to them and theirs) that the is brought away from her kindred and parents, Father, Mother, &c. and that all these the must now forfake; because in flead of these, she shall have thildren, of whom she may expect as much and more comfort, then from any parents, and more common, then wom any parents, whom they mailt make Princes in all the earth] This indeed cannot be applyed unto Solomon, but as spoken very hyperbolically. Not but that it is lawfull enough for Peter and Orators, especially in such an argument as this, to use such flowers (thought indeed to the state of the such sections). the hyperbole was not for much in the first penning, fince fo much, of foglorious a King as Solomon was, and coming to the Crown with fo much expectation, by way of good omen, might be faid well enough: we know of Kings within memory, who by marriages have had children Princes in diversparts of the earth : not in the first penning therefore I fay, so much, as in the application of it to the perming interested 1 may to materia, as in the application of a to the event) but confidering on Poet here, as a Prophet inspired by God; to whom things future, were present; and then looking into the flory, how it fared with Solontons posterity; so indeed we may say, Rory, now it farca wint Solomons pointering; 10 inacca we may jay, that of Solomon it is very hard to make good the words, without the liberty of a very large hyperbole. But to Chitift, the application is very proper and obvious: who by the preaching of his minifers, having converted Nations and Kingdoms to his obtdience, may, in that respect, be said to have made them, and with them, those that have been converted by them, Princes in all the earth. For unto all true Christians, an eternal kingdom we know, is appointed and prepared by Christ in Heaven. So divers; of the ancients especially. But a nother respect too, and more literal, as I conceive, the words are appliable. For as many Kings and Princes, as either at the first were converted, or since that, have professed as either at the first were converted, or since that, have protested Christianity; as literally, she were Princes, truly and really, so as truly and really, shough spiritually, Christ his off-pring. Even the same both string and general, who have regard of their temporate, are called Naysing-slatters, and naysing-monters of the Church, Essay 43.3. And shough shall be thy northing-slatters, are spiritually the Churches, and Christ, children. As of these, so we may be defined to the characteristic strings of the characteristic strings and the strings of the strings of the characteristic strings. those words in the first verse, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, &c. that they belong unto Christ more immediately and properly then unto Solomon. But see more there.

But it down her yet appear where the aniths sight should be searched to the search search search and the search Lye, or to what purpose this river is mentioned. But then it is furaye, or to what purpose this river is menuouse. You client is sufficient for the fail, that great rives are a great fafequard and protection to Towns, and that the Prophet Efay doth upbraid the Jyws of their infidelity, Efay 8.6. for that they defified their own rivers, as unfate and ulefels because of their finallness; and commended furth as Nilus and Euphrates, which for their greatness and swiftness as Pillus and Euphrates, which for their greatness and instructes could keep out an enemy, and fecure Towns. This indeed makes the antitheir clear: but it is a great deal, to be supplyed and prefupoled; and more indeed, then I can well gather our of that fupposed; and more indeed, inen I can well gather out of that pallage of Einy, For a much as this people region between 15 she pallage of Einy, For an under a thin people region and Remaliahs for: Now therefore behalf, &c. finde (as the fine temperates the reliable state of the nut nothing to that purpose, as a sacrogon. As a cumurary among all men, to compare great armises to great inimadations; and by an opposite metaphors, (which otherwise would be obscure, because not for ordinary) a left army, of frength, is here compared to a little river. If therefore we interpret the Pfalmith here, from that the river. tie river. It therefore we interpret the realmun neres from that paffage of Efay, (which may be, whether the author of this Pfalm wrote before Efay, or Efay before him, which is uncertain) then taking the former words not literally, but as an allegorical expressions. taking the former words not intensity but as an allegorical expre-fion of great firs, and great armies in the world, the reason of the antibelit will require, that by a river, (opposed to the [ra, &c.) small means, and small forces (in comparison, and in appearance) final means, and mail forces (in companion, and mappearance) fhould be un ferflood. But this upon a supposition, that the Pfalmit suff be interpreted by Efay, which is the more likely, because wars are directly mentioned atterwards, and God, in relation to it, as is probable, flyled, The Lord of Hofts, ver. 7 & 11. But again; there may be a further antithefis in this, that whereas the neighbourhool of the lea, or of great waters, may be the overthrow of great mountains; mount Sion, (the type of the Church) the further it flood from any fuch, the more it might be conceived out of danger. Now applying these things to the Church of God in general, as most Interpreters do, who hence infer, (and insist at large upon it, some of them) that notwithstanding the troubles and commotions of Kingdoms and Estates, the Church, by the power and providence of God, may enjoy her peace and tranquillity; this must be understood with due limitation. For otherwise, the faying of an Anciencis true, that, Non Respublica in Eccless, sed Eccless in Republica; that is, That the Common-wealth is not in the Church, but the Church in the Common-wealth : and as part the Church, but the Church in the Common-vector. and spart of it, it is like enough as to enjoy the peace; for op partake of the troubles and diftempers of it. Which is one reason why the Church, in what state soever collected, is injoyned to pray for the peace and in what state lower collected, is injoyined to pray for the peace and prosperty of that State; For hings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and a peaceable life, in all godliness and boness, I Tim 2.2. as is well observed, and pressed by the same ancient Author. However, it is true too, and observed by many, that cient Author. However, it is true too, and observed by manyshat by a fecret power and providence of God, the Church of God, though it suffer for the present, as part; yet in processe of time; it often gains and increases by the troubles and committees of States often gains and increases by the troubles and commotions of States and King-toms: This God, who can bring light out of darkness, can do: but it is not the way that he harh appointed for the prefervation of his Church; and we must pray against temperations; though formerimes used by God, as means of our falvation, V.s., God it in the midfl of her? the Words as propreciestly spoken, occanic nayation was to come from thence to the Gentiles, is Mount Sion, on the fide of the North, the City of the great King, I Thefe words I finde varioully printed in the English Copies, Some, after Mount Sion, have a colon; and fome a femicolon: others, a anter mount of the have a count, and tome a femecount; others, a common onely, How he was intended by the Translators, I know not. Most interpreters joyn, on the side of the North, to Mount Sion: upon a supposition, that Mount Sion stood Northward of Som: upon a supposition, that Mount Sion stood Northward of Jeruslalen; grounding upon the words in Elay, 14, 13, 1 will fit also upon the Mount of the Congregation in the sides of the North, But this is much opposed by some others, who would have these words, on the sides of the North, to belong to the words following, the sity, &c. They bring Josephus, and some others to prove, that Mount Sion stood in the South, and had Jeruslalem Northward: and that the chiefest parts of the City, were to the North, Others and that the enterty parts of the City, were to the North, Others again, who maintain the fame concerning the fluutation of both, yet take thefe words, Mount Sim, on the fide of the North, together; because though Sion it felf were Southward, as they maintain, yet it had Jeruslaem, (the chiefest parts of it) on the North, On the North then, not absolutely, in regard of it self; but with the greates to Jeruslaem. Verl. 2. _____ Ow and high, vich and poor together] Psal. Ca. 9. V 4. I will incline mine mine car to a parable] I will deliver that which with much fludy and diligent attention I have got, or attained into. No trivial ordinary matter, which every man of himself is capable of 3 but such as I have received from the learned profesiors of piety, or the Author of Wildom himself. the learned protetors or percy, or the Author of Wildom bindlef, A parable in the Scipiture, and "Typ17 too, there translated a dark faying, is taken sometimes for a sententious speech, or excellent doctrine; though otherwise incidier very obscure, nor parabolical: as Pfa1,78... i will open my menth in a parable, &c. the subject of that Pfalm being nothing but an institutional University of the Control of the Pfalm being nothing but an institutional Our Poetically feet our commemoration of Gods mercies to his people, in several kinder, and their frequency unchanditudes. And their frequency unchanditudes. and their frequent unthankfulness. And such is the doftrine of this Pfalm, which very well deserves the solemnity of this extraordinary prefacing: a doctrine of as much comfort and confequence to men, as any can be : delivered here more plainly, then in any other part of Scripture, till Christs time, Daniel excepted. The sum is this; That we should not be troubled at the prosperity of the wicked and ungodly, fince that this world, with all its de-lights, are things so transitory: God having provided better things for them that live in his fear in another world. That this doctrine was not fo common, in those days; and why, hath been fiewed upon the 37. Pfalm: fo that in that respect, though otherwise plainly enough delivered here, it might be styled a parable, or enigina, See more there.

V. 5. when the iniquity of my heels shall compass me about There be no less then 17. or 18, several (as is pretended) interpretations of these words; so many collected by Lorinus: besides what more may be gathered by others : fo many, but most of them fo forced and impertinent, or coincident with others, as even to recite them, I conceive would be but loss of time and labour. The cite them, I conceive would be but 1015 or time and labour. The chiefels, and almost onely considerable, are but two, These will be well worth our consideration, because it is a point of high confequence, First then there be, (as most Ancients) who by heel, fequence. First then there be, (as most Ancients) who by neer, understand the last of a mans life, or the day of death, to this purpose; Why should I compute any thing, that I should need to tear, when that dreadful day shall come, when sentence, in private first, which take the private introduction which renence, in private introduction and could be facilitied to the principal could be facilitied by the principal could be fail to us, this at the end and clofe of my life. It hould be compalled about with first, fuch epictally, whose private which is the principal conficiency to oppose the private pri continue to oppies ourgs. Intermed a so in my power, through his ofds grace, op prevent it; or in cafe I have finned, through his mercy, to repeth in time; and obtain pardon; why should I fear for much? Death indeed I cannot avoid; all men are born to it; but that which onely should make dreadful unto men, I may avoid. So, the words would be translated; Why should I fear in the evil day, that the iniquity of my heels will compalie me about? For the translation, there is no question of it to be made, but that it may be right enough, as to the Hebrew words; but to make this sense of it, much must be supplyed, and yet it will hardly do. Much lesse do I conceive what convenient sense and coherence can be made, if following the translation, by, the iniquity of my heels, t. e made, it following the translation, by, incrinquity of my neety, coins of my life, or the punishment due unto my fins, as some others would have, be understood. The second interpretation therefore, which I reckon considerable, is, to take [10] iniquity, theretors, which I recken commerciants, so, to rake [1] migath, for wicked men; the abirtack for the concrete: which is ufual enough; to this effect; Why should I fear, &c. when wicked unjuft men (enouraged by their successed and worldly prosperity;) pursue mecloso, on every side? Either I fear, and be diffusayed; or any other godly man, that puts his truft in God? Why not rather confiler, that thus and thus is the case of the wicked; and his worldy profpering accordingly to be valued: Whereas God will redeem my foul, Sc. ver. 15. See there They are faid in fome Languages, to purfue to the heels, that purfue very clothy, and with great animofity. They are therefore said to cast the words, or, the word of God, behinde them: who though they shew much affection to it, and love to talk of it, and will go many miles, perchance, to hear one Sermon; yet apply it not to their hearts, (which is the true use of it) to amend their lives by it, but please themselves in their own conceits, as though they were the onely Elect People of God; and upon that confidence freely censure and condemn others, whether good or bad, (not sparing them that are of nearest relation, brothers, &c. verse 20. Thou fitteff, &c.) because they make not so much outward shew, or refuse to joyn with them in their affected ways; though they shew the power of godliness in their lives and conversations, much more then themselves. So Ezek. 33. 30, 31, &c. Also thou son of man, &c. And lo, thou act unto them as a very lovely song, of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument: for they hear thy words; but they do them not. If therefore we admit not the word of God into our hearts, (which will appear by our lives) though we go never so far to please our ears with it, we may truly be said to have and reject it, because we make not that use of it, for which it is intended.

That therefore we must gather from his words, is; that we may know fuch by their deeds and actions, whether theft, adultery, murther, falle dealing, cheating, drunkenness, lyhig, swearing, and the like; so contrary to God, and all godlines, declared unto us by the word of God, that they that pretend to godlines and the word of God, and yet do such things, which they pretend to love and honour; or to be extreamly blinded and deluded by the Devil, that they flould not fee, what of it felf is so plain to be seen and understood : but this especially, of open triff and adultery, mentioned in this serfe,—For as for diffionfly, and falle d. aling in a cunning way, under pretences of love, and the like; and uncharitablenels in centures and judgements; and malicious detraction t in the following verfes; judgements; ana manecous actraction: in the totlowing vertes; helf-things are very ordinarily to be found in all, or most of them, that are great pretenders, (but hypocritically) to the word of God. Hitherto in the explication of thefe vertes, from ver, fig. But unto the wicked, &c. I have followed Expositors of best account; (as Calvin for one) who make hypocrites, such as make count; (as Carrinto one) who make hypothets, then as make great flew of piety by external performances, (as all kinde of ce-remonies in general;) but especially by their zeal to Pradicatio-nem Verbs, (that is, Sermons) to be the men aimed at. Indeed if hypocrites in general, the words will infer, that such especially are intended, that make a great brag of Gods word, and shew much zeal that way. But when I well consider the original words, I cannot absolutely conclude, whether hypocrites, that make a shew cannot abloquety concuracy whether hypocrites, that make a new of godlinefs, or openly profane men, are intended. Such I mean, who though they knew themfelves and their lives to be bad, neither did much hide it, or were much afhamed of it; yet hoped well for all that, as Jews born, Abrahams children, and upon that account, having right to the Covenant of Grace; heirs of the Promifes, visible members of the Church, and the like. See Jer. chap. 7. 1,2,3. to ver.17. It is likely there be among Christians too, too many, who though they indulge themselves all manner of liberty, and make little or no conscience of their ways; yet flatter themfelves that they are Christians, and love the Church, and hope to felves that they are Chrittans, and rove the Church, and anope to finde mercy: which if they do, (without repentance and amendment) the word of God must be faile, Mat. 7.22,23, & 1 Cor. 6.9. 10. Be not deceived, &c. often repeated (in the same, or the like words) in other places. If we follow this sense, to declare my statutes, will be, to boaft of my law, (by a special favour delivered unto the Jews onely, the feed of Abraham, nor made common to all nations) and gladly to talk of any Covenant, as the Circumcifion, &c. as though that could profit thee any thing, as long as, &c. Title, when Nathan the Prophet came unto him] 2 Sam. 12. 1, and 11.2. To reprove him, because he had committed so horrible fins, and lain in the fame fo long without repentance.

Verf. 1. A Coording to the multitude He is very earnest, as know-ing, that the act of forgiving of fins, is an act of greatest mercy, yea and power. It was more to fay, (to fay it, authoritarive; that is, by warrant of ones proper power and authority, and not by way of delegation, and declaration onely, as Gods Mininot by way of designation, and decignation onely, as, your mini-fers; though that too be a great power;) Son, thy fine be for-given thee; then to fay, drife, take no thy bod, and walk, Match, 9, 5, 6. With that zeal therefore shat, we would pray (and greater, if it be possible) for deliverance from temporal afflictions and extremities of highest nature; we should pray for forgivenness of fins, of great fins especially; as a thing both of greater confequence, to us; and of greater difficulty, in it felf, but that, to God all things are equally possible. But few are so sensible of their sins, as they are of any worldly cross; and accordingly they carry themselves in their prayers and devotions. They have good ground to hope well of themselves, that finde it otherwise in themselves.

V. 2. Wash me thorowly from mine iniquity] My sins stick so fast to me, that I have need of some singular kinde of washing, He alludes to the legal washings. He would not onely be forgiven for what is passed, but so throughly cleansed, and so purified in his Soule, that he might not relapse 6 F 2

V. 4. Against these, thee onely have I sinued] Some interpret these words, as lpoken by David by way of aggravation, or exaggeration of his faults; a siff he intended to say. That it was not the tion of his faults; a siff he intended to say. That it was not the judgements of the world that he flood upon, whether accufing, or judgements of the world inter he tood upon, whether accising, or excufing i but that which roubled him, was, that he had fo green to the control of the cont Others more fimply, that he speaks as a King, who though he were Others more amply, that he is taken a tang, who though he were not, as a king, lyable to the punishment of the Law, yet he was ac-countable to God: fo most ancients, and some modern. Others again there be, who allo follow the simple meaning, but to another fenie, Againft thee enely have I finned : because I have used great fecrecy in the fault, that it might not be known unto men; both in the matter of adultery, and in that of the mutrher; as appears by the History. Whence it is that Nathan tells him from God, For the rintery. whence it is that evaluative is time from God, For thou didft it secretly; but I will do this before all IIracl, and before the Sun, a Sam. 12. 12. Nevertheless, it appears even by that which oun, 2 am. 12.12. Preventneiers, it appears even by that which follows there, ver, 14. Howbeit, because by this deed, intu hold given great occasion to the eminist of God to Halphome, &c. that the matter was come abroad; and withall, (which I would have well observed, because it may lead us perchance to the right meaning, as much as any thing that high been faid) how much God (if we may fo fpeak) did lufter in these foul acts of his servant David. Why might not then David, out of a zeal to God and his glory meetly, without any regard to himself, say, That nothing grieved him to much, neither matter of fname and reproach from men; nor matter of punishment upon himself from God; as that his sin did fo much redound upon God; or in Nathans (or Gods) own words. to much reasonat upon Goa; or in Nathanas (or Goas) own words, that he had given fo great eccapion to the enemies of Goa to blagheme. This would do very well, I think, if it will as well agree with that which follows; whereof we shall consider when we come to it. But in the mean time, taking it for granted, that Davids purpose was (which this very repetition of words, Against thee, thee onely, &c. doth argue) to aggravate his sin: by which I do not undercc. uous aggier) to aggirles; but ruly and feelingly of-fland hyperbolically to amplifie; but ruly and feelingly to fer out the hainounfiels of it: this therefore grounding upon as gran-ted, in further purlannee of the fenfe, I would have the words of old Bli well-confidered of, 1 Sam. 2.24,25. Nay my fons. faid he, old Dil Welt-contacted of, 1 Jama. 24,55, Nay my join, 1ata (ne for it is me god report that I leave "ye make the Lardy people to transferile. If me than fin against another, the Juggle shall judge him: but if a man fin against the Lard, with full interest for him? His transferile was not, that their fin, absolutely and precisely, was to God lang was not, that their fin, absolutely and precisely, was to God onely; for it was publick, and could not but offend many in divers respects; but to God, or against God, more immediately. Now Davids sin was against God more immediately; first, as he was a King: I will not dispute about matter of right, how far above, or ning: 1 will not anoute about matter of right, now far above, or under the Law, as Kings, &c. which I know would be fubject to much opposition: but de fallo, as we say; that so, a King may do much, which others cannot, or dare not; I think will cafily be granted. Proud Jezabel knew what the faid, when the upbraided her husband for his tendernelle about Naboths vineyard, Destribution govern the hingdom of Israel? I King, 21.7. Again, David hoped to carry the matter so closely, that it should not have been known. It appears that he did endeavoor, what he could, to concealit. Now in either of these two cases, when the fearor knowledge of man is removed, and that a man thinks himself fecure, as to the world; for a man then freely to indulge himfelf a liberty of sinning, is a high provocation, and to make a pra-ctice of it, would argue a desperate case. Nothing can be more contrary to either true conscience, or true generosity. Lastly, as it was a fin against God more properly, whilst it was concealed; fowhen it came to be publick, it proved a fin against God coo, as properly, though in another refrect. For David, being such as properly, though in another reflect. For David, being fuch a one as he was, so approved by God, and of such exemplary piety abroad; piety and religion must needs suffer very much in this his, so soul and so notologs a safe. To make the Lords pople to transfergife, was that Eli chiefly objected to his sons: and that accasses was given to the emente of God to Malphome, was part of Nathans charge (as we saw before) unto David, in all these respects when, David might well say, Against thee, thee seeds were that thou mightest be justified, &c. and be clear when thou judgest] There be, who making a parenthesis of the former verse, (For I acknowledge, &c.) and the former part of this, (Against thee, thee in thy fight:) joyn these words, that then mightest, &c.

with the first and second verses; as though he intended to put God in minde of his goodnesse, and of his gracious promises made to himfelf; that God would be as good as his word, &c. But befides what may be objected from the words themselves, rhe last of this what may be objected from the words themlelves, the laft of this verfe. (and be clear when thou judgef!): It is apparent by S. Pauls inference ipon them, or citation of them, Rom, 3.4, that that cannot be the meaning. Though it might be faid, that S. Paul cited them by any of allufion onely, in which cafe he might take the more liberty; which is not without example, pechance. But in very deed, Davids meaning, was S. Pauls meaning; and it will fit the context here, as well as there. That which both intended, is, to give all the glory unto God; which is best done, by man, when man freely acknowledgeth his own wretchednesse and man, when man there acknowledged his own weethennes and finfulnesse; and pronounceth at the same time, perfect truth and untutnene; and pronounced at the fails, office of the goodnesses are properly said to glorifie God, when they treely and fully confesses are properly said to glorifie God, when they treely and fully confesses are properly laid to glorific used, when they treety and fully confelle their fins; as is sucwed hefore in the beginning of the Notes, upon that part of the Title; of \(\frac{1}{2} \) \(\fra would say upon this occasion of mainly that it was the priviledge of percegative (Obj. of pix by or sin sign of year, in Plato). Let God done have that he sur;) of God, to be without faults. This I conceive more probable and proper to the place, then that David (as some would have it) by those words should inten that David (as some would have it) by those words should inthen that David (as hour punishment foever God shall inslict upon him, or howfoever he shall deal with him (whether he fink or swim) yet he would have God acquitted; fo that neither his truth (in matter of promiles) nor his justice (in his retributions) should upon this occasion be, by any to be questioned, I think this is more about. But if any like it better, I am not against it. There is a difference in the words too, that may make S, Pauls quotation to differ from the Plalmift, observed by most upon this Plalm. and be clear when thou judgeft; faith the Pialmift, and be clear, (or mightest overcome: that makes no great difference,) when thou art judged; S. Paul. that mixes no given a universely more bounds junger 3, reall, David, actively: Paul, patively. The matter may easily be reconciled. For at the fame time that God doth judge, (or execute judgement upon any) he may allo be faile be junged; whilst men patic their centures either as applauding, or diffiking his judgements. And then may be be faid to overcome, when judged, when men acknowledge the justice of his j dgements, Belidet, it is well observed by some here, and proved by divers examples, that S.Paul by a special idiotism, (though in this particular passage he follow the Septuagint,) useth in his citations to turn many active verbs, into passives. But after all this, it may be said, that this difference of the verbs, is rather a milapprehension of Interpreters, then any real difference, For the word S. Paul pleth is xelridus (vai mitons er To netredul oe :) which word may be taken actively, as well as paffively : and fo indeed rendred here by Beza ; & vincas, quando tu judicas

There is good hope of them that are, though their fin begreat, As their case on the other side, is desperate, who dare sin with security, and think it a testimony of their faith, that they mistrust not themselves for it. But here is a question raised ; han dled at large by some upon this Pfalm: Nathan the Prophet, had been with David, before this, and declated unto him from God. that his fin was pardoned : or, that God had put away his fin, 2 Sam 12. 13. Why then did he make any further question? This, as is conceived, might argue fome kind of infidelity in him. It is an-fwered, that it is possible Nathan came to him about it, more then once, and did not so fully absolve him at his first, though the Scripture make mention but of one coming, and for brevity, comprehend and contract all in one. And besides, that it is not against the nature of Faith, to be folicitous, even after absolution : and that fuch expressions of a deep sense and remorfe, do well become a finner after reconciliation, as well as before; it being the propriety of an ingenuous heart in this case, the more he finds and teels God gracious and merciful unto him; the more to be afte-eted with the remembrance of his fins, and past provocations. But besides all this, by Nathans words that are recorded, it doth not appear that Gods pardon, delivered at that time, did extend to a-nother world. The Lord hath put away thy sin, thou shalt not dy; faid Nathan. That the pardon was a general pardon, extending to the foul, as well as to the body, I make no question ; yet if the declaration of it were not more express and particular, David might well pray for further affurance, before he could think himfelf ic

Or as here, thy free spirit; that is, the Spirit of adoption, Rom. 8 15, 16, and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty, 2 Cor. 3. 17. Some interpret it , Spiritu liberali; id eft, liberaliter in me effuso, with a free spirit, that is, say they, a Spirit (or gifts of the Spirit) freely powred upon me. V. 16. For thou defireft not facrifice] See before upon Pfal. 40.6. mine ears haft thou opened, &cc. It is a common observation among Interpreters, that the same words, and phrases, are sometimes taken in very different senses: yea sometimes in one and the same chapter; as essewhere hath been said and shewed by some example. However, even there, this sense is followed by some; as if David direeted his speech to such of the people, as yet stood in opposition to him: inviting them to submit, that so they might, under him, and his government, have part in the Legal fervice. But Pfalm 85. 10. mercy and truth are met togethert there must of necessity be some difference, to make sense of the words. The difference which most Expositors pitch upon generally, is, that mercy immediately proceeds from Gods goodness and compassion : truth is the performance of a promised mercy : mercy, in its original; but justice, or faithfulness, in the performance. So here, in this verle, and so elsewhere they are commonby diffinguished; and here indeed, as in diverse other places, it may do very well ; if we like best to distinguish them : which, as may do very well; if we like best to ontangami them. I had before, is not absolutely needful. But Plalm 35, 10. before mentioned, where we must admit (to make sense) or difference, yet how the word truth should there be taken, great question is made by Expositors, and not case by any man to be resolved. Annotations on the Book of Pfalmes. V. 9. Before your pots can feel the thorne? Of the drift and feone of the words in general, that the fuddainers of wieled ment defruction, often infifted upon, not by David onely in other plaints, but by Job, and others, upon this argument, is here let out by a similitude; of this, there is no question at all. So much the context of it self will inforce, and all interpreters apprehend it for Bur what is the fimilicude, and of the meaning, and right ordering of particular words, there is not like confent, as may ap pear by variety of translations, some of them so unlike to one a-nother, as a man would hardly take them for translations of the fame verle. Verle 1. Deliver me from mine enemies It is the common course of God, to pray unto God against their enemies, if they have any : but it must be the care of all truly and folidly reli glous, to confider well first, what enemies they pray against whether fuch as Davids enemies; who violently perfecuted him without any just provocation; yea though he fought for peace; and did his utmost to win them by his gentleness, and the like; as himself witnesseth in divers places: and here particularly, as verses the second, third, and fourth. So may we hope our prayers may be available; at lest not unacceptable. But if we make men our foes, by any proud, infolent, or unjust actions; or if upon apprehension of just provocation, we think to bear our selves upon Gods protection, or affiftance, before our selves have used all fair and charitable means (which God himself requireth at our hands) of reconciliation; we may fooner expect to make God our enemy by our prayers; than that he will grant

This is the best sense have a been made of those words, though divers others have been devised by Expostror, all which to relate, having no better opinion of them than I have, I think would not be worth the labour. Those that think the incorruption of the Bible, which we maintain against the Papists, (though there be among them not a few, that agree with us in this parti-cular) to confift in the maintaing of every title and letter that is found in the printed or written Copies of these dayes; they both involve themselves needlesly into many difficulties, out of which to get out, they must trust more to their wit, than to any folidity of reason; and expose the Scriptures to more opposition, that I fay not danger, then they are aware of. There be good Protestants, we know, that have been of another mind; if so be that Beza was a good Protestant; who though he wrote in Geneva yet I do not hear that he was ever questioned by any authority, for his many conjectures and emendations of the text of the New Testament which by many have been observed, and by some colle-Red, Neither was Calvin fo ferupulous, See before upon Pfalm 42. 11. the help of my countenance, and my God. He would have this place corrected by that; and for the lame reason it is more than probable, that those words, The God of my mercy, wherewith the following verse (as here divided) doth begin, should belong unto this. But this we need not preffe, feeing that either way, whether the words be need not prefit; seeing that either way, whether the words be here at the end, or begin their will be good and perfect. Which cannot be faid of 192 and 193, as appears by the divers fancies of Expofitors. Nether is Mollerus alone of this opinion. Fo-it comes all to one, whether we say 193 must be corrected 193: or that 193 pure for 193, and must be translated, My frength, or Ony firength, as in the last verse which divers do. and so both the Chaldee Paraphrase, and the Septuagint have it too. But in the very next verse, in those words we have already spoken of, thus also it is written in the Text ITDH, his mercy, but in the margin, and pointed 1707, and the efore translated by all, my mercy. Now if any shall upon this ground further infift, that whereas in this veries is 171 2008, translated there, I will wait: it is in the last verie 17100N, I will sing: (the difference being but of one letter there neither; in the original) and should therefore be here likewife; I deny the confequence. There is no fuch reason there to induce us. The sense is good and perfect, as it is all antient translations observe the difference : punago, here ; Land. there in the septuaght, &c. and befides there be divers examples of fuch differences in other repeated verses, where no colour is of suspicion, but that they were so made of purpose by the Author, So here, the fense by this alteration, is not only good and warranta-ble; but very pregnant, and emphatical. For having first said that he would wait; he dorn now fweetly alluding by this change of one letter to his own word, proceed and fay that he will fing: which is a further degree of confidence, as if he had already reapt the fruit of his waiting, and his business now, were to give thanks. God hath Spoken one, two have I heard this : that is, one time; two times. Or, which comes all to one, one thing, two things: but rather as before; and so elswhere, one, one, one, e.g. The sense, ther as before; and so elswhere, one, tor, once, &c. The sense is, That both by the word and express testimony of God lumself, and the acknowledgement of men, (it being a common speech in al. wise mens mouthes) it is most sure and certain; and underyable, whe mens mouthes, it is most threat and certain; and underlyable, unquestionable truth, That all power, and strength, (let mentake never so much upon themselves, and domineer for a while, who never to much upon themietyes, and domineer for a white, who in very truth are no better than unnity, &c. ver.9) and dominion, doth properly belong unto God alone. Such confellions and acknowledgements of Gods power, that God is all in all, &c. the writings of ancient wife Heathens of all kinde, afford plentifully, if a man would collect them. And as for the Word or Law of a man would collect them. And as for the wood or Law of God, befides the generality of it, which tends to that end, to teach man to put his confidence in God, and to depend of him in all man to put his commence in coo, and to depend of him in all things there be divers particular places, more expirels or that pur-pole, to which thele words of the Pfalmilt might have reference. And shewing mercy, &c. Exod 20,5,6. This is plausible; yet if any man like better to understand it of Gods Word in general, confirmed unto David by many Prophets and prophefics, I am not against it. As for the words and manner of expression here used, that in Job comes nearest; Once have I spoken, but I will not answer: yeatwice, but I will proteed no further, Job 40.5. This power of God the Psalmitt doth here the more emphatically set out, hecause it was the onely comfort and support he had in all his adversities and greatest extremities, that though for a while it might feem otherwise, whilest the wicked and ungodly had the better of it, &c. Verf. r. P. Raife waiteth for thee, O God, in Sion] Hebr. The rivary is filtent must thee: or more properly, filtentimonibit is filence unlot thee. For it is properly a Noam lustrative; and according to the propriety of the word, some expound it. The filence of others, (in other parts of the world, where thou art not known) is in Sion dly praife; that is, Thou are daily praifed and glorified in thy Church by the godly, for thy manifold mercies, both spiritual and temporal, which others take no notice of, and bury in an unthankful filence, or oblivion. Others, Tibit filentium hasse eff; that is, say they, Thy praites are 6 many, 60 incomprehensible, 60 inexpressible, that filence (or filent admiration) doth become us; and them, better than words. Or, as some others, daystheying, deservaging, that is, which no man can speak against thee, or deny; not to be contradicted by any and comfequently by al men acknowledged. See upon, God hath speken ome; twice have I heard this, &c. Pfal. 62.17. Laftly, Thi filtertium, laur: ideft, fileant alla omnia, ubi de te landando agitur : Pa-vete linguis. So the learned Grotius; That it, faith he, Eet all other things be fleat, when then art to be praifed. Est all menhold their peace, and be attentive. The words of the Prophet Habakkuk comb very near; The Lord is in his holy Remple: let all the earth Rep fleate before him, Hab.2.20. Thefe indeed keep belt to the geep filence before Birth, Hab. 2.30. Thele indeed keep belt to the propiety of the words; but they go fomewhatfur for the feed. Some would have him to lay by these words, that God by his universal goodness gives the wholeworld occasion of rejoycing even from East to West; he faith elsewhere, that the whole earth is full of his goodness. he jasth ellewhere, that the whole carm is, full or his goodness, Others, by the out-goings of the morning, underfrand men going with the morning light to labour, according to their feve, al imployments: and by the out-goings of the evening, wilde beafts, that ployments: and by the out-going of the evening, wide beaths, that wait for the darknefs, and then come abroad for prey: Which they, very probably, ground upon the words of the Pfalmid, Pfal, 20.20, 18.C. Thou makeful darkpefs, and it was night; wherein all the beaft of the carth do every forth: The young Lyons, 8cc. 'the San right, 8cc. Man goal forth sunds his work, and to his ladow might he evening. Here plainly we have the out-going, both of moning; and evening. The lat take to be the chiefelt Exvofitions. If the clark of the distribution of the control of the contro yet for the authority of the man, I will nog omit it. He translates the whole verse thus; Qui facis ut canant exortis maintings & ve-

It were not ca-fic to fay what he meant by this translation, did not he explain ic in his Notes: and yet not cafe neither, to apply the Note to the inh's Notes: and yet not cafe neither, to apply, the Notes ot he translation; 29at insist diet a principle of finm confinmi in deendir hominbut laudent tium; 50 he explains it: let the Reader judge. After all their, there is yet another interpretation, not left probable than any; which expounds the four-goings, of the vicillinue of day and judy, and that admirable equipage of Sun and Moon with other Stars, that belongs unto them: wherein Gods great power and projecter coments, see nas much as aim anything; as if he would lay. Thou giveft men octation to praise and glottle the, when they for the fad amirable only on the property of the seed of the fad and the seed of the fad and the fit and comfort of both, both of day and night. Which is made the more probable, by companing with Jerumy 31-33, rule mainting the Lord, white girch the Sun for a light by day, and the srdinance of the Mon and 9 the Start for a light by night: which divident cas, when the water thereof roar; Gui diffumpit mart, by frammer, finding just, Junius) the Lard of hight is the Manne. Here we fee the Sea allo is mertinored, as in the former verfex, which, as we faid, makes the matter fo much the more probable. But why might not, which would make the expection more poetical, and ye the fente more literal, the Morning, and the Evening themselves, be failed to rejoyee? O'l the morning, or morning Sun, either of his out-going, or rejoying, better would be little quellion, festing we have both Plail. 95. which is at a triangeous moning out of his changers; and cripteth of a filton man is run a rate. 'Exp. yeey well, according to Poets, who use to describe the cosing of the Evening, as a thing that had no dependance from the going down of the Sun: but had its proper out-going, as well as the Morning Commerging the great of the control of the sun in the sun is the sun that the would might be translated; thou lastly, what hinders but that the would might be translated; thou makeful the out-going of the Morning, and the Evening (Originam, nor not, which would make the expression more poetical, and yet the latty, what binders out that the would might be training of the Morning, and the Evening (official, nor verlers) to revoyee. After all this, we may not omit a palage of the Prophet Micah, where this expression is a fed concerning Christ, fomewhat may be made of it in confirmation of fome of the interpretations that have been infifted upon. His words are: Em this, pretations that have oven limited upon. would have their words to be intended of the Holy Land paricularly, and think that allusion is made to Deut. 11, 10,11, where larly, and think that allation is made to Deut, II, 1011, where the promified Land is find to be watered, nor as Egypt, with multiplicity of tivers, whether natural, or artificial; which in Habrew are properly called Daylyg, which is the word here allowed by the with the ranny beauer; that here therefore the rain of learen is called a river, because in fupplies the use of a river; but, the results of the second of the called arriver, occaute it impries the use of a river; out, nor new of God, as immediately coming from Heaven, and of a different origine from ordinary rivers. Some again apply, the words, to the river Jordan, or Siloe. But I fee no necessity of refunding the words to the Holy Land. The rain may be called the river of God, with allufion to ordinary rivers, without any particular reference to those of Egypt, or to that place that speaks of them. The coherence as I conceive, will be much better to. The Pfalmift there fore doth here fet outthe benefit of the rain, which is as it were the great river of God, tull of water, and sufficient to water all the earth. great-tive to roots then or waters an interaction were the prepared been orn, when the help for provided for it The meaning is, that when God by rain on otherwise, but his need of proof (which is the word of the Original) the earth, thin is the other in cafe to bring forth corn for the use of men. And then to fay, that it was not intended by Christ for a forme of Prayer, to be used verbatim, as it is set down; but I know not for what; is so ridiculous, and contradictory to the Text it self, and to the practile of all Christians of ancientest times; that we may as well allow of Papilts to fay, That when Christ injoyned, Drink ye all of this: he meant the Priests onely, and take it for a sufficient excuse of their abominable sacriledge, in bereaving the people of the Cup, in the admini-fration of the Sacrament. But to return to that form preferibed Numb. 6. 24, &c. most of the phrases there, tend to this, (well worthy our observation) to teach us, that the happinesse of man doth consist in being admitted to the Presence of God, and his Beatifical Vision; the sruits whereof reaping even in this life, (where we see but as through a glasse) Temporall bleffings, and Spirituall; what may wee expect, when wee shall bee admitted to behold Him face to

Now by the earth, some understand fpiritually, the length and printing of the property and products of men colleged by the contract of the contract and printing of the property and printed with the property and printed with the contract and printed with the property and printed with the printed with the property and printed with the hearts and mindes of men, cultivated by the knowledge of Chrift, and his Gospel, and by the spirit of regeneration, to bring forth fruits plentifully, Luke 8.8, 15. 2 Cor. 9.8. A Pfalm or Song | See Notes on the title of Pial. 30.

Verl. 1. T Et God arife, let his enemies be feattered : let them alfo kec.] Num.10.35. See before upon Vialm 47.5. God is gone up with a flow. Most Interpreters agree, that the occafion of this Plain, was that folemn fetching of the Arkto Jerufalem, and placing of it in the Tabernacle David had prepared for it : whereof we reade, 2 Sam. 6.12, &c. Some, because many tor it: whereor we reade, 2 Sam. 6.12, &C. Some, occasie many things here have reference, or at leaft, are applyable to the coming out of Egypt, and what then happened, they make that to be the argument. But I do not conceive that, to be a fufficient reason. For the coming out of Egypt, was a subject to the Jews of a very large capacity in that kinde, and which upon all occafions, of publick praifes and thankigivings especially, might come in very well. Befides, the Ark, we know, was not ohely a confe-quent of their egrefs, in regard of the time: but in all their progress, their conttant palladium and fecurity; fothat in that respect, their coming out of Egypt was no heterogeneous or impertinent, but very fit and proper subject, upon such an occasion. As for them that would have no other literal meaning throughout the whole Plain, than Chrift, because applyable to him; or, as they urge, applyed to him by the Apolle; though that be true of a good part of it, yet we deny the necessity of the consequence, See before upon Pla1.40.6. Mine eart hast thou opened; and Pla1.45. upon the title of it.

upon the trice of it. before bin face. V. 3. mules the rightness be glad.) All those particulars concerning the wicked and ungodly from the beginning of the Pfalm, (as these also, that concern the rightness) in this verse, might have been translated in the form of prophecist, founds from the concern the rightness. well, as in the form of imprecations: which though frequent wen, as in the form of imprecasions which though requient in the Pfalms, (of which fee upon Pfal₃1₄4. Let them be con-founded, &c.) yet the more frequent, the lelie need there is of multiplying them without caule. It is true, that Numb, 10, 35, 36. from whence part of the words are taken, the precatory, or imprecatory form is most proper, However, it doth not follow, but that here, the original words being indifferent to cither, it may be otherwise. So Vatablus, Junius, Calvin: difpergentur : fugient ; periebunt : latabuntur : or to that purpose : not, dispergantur, fugiant, &c. However, I except not against this Translation, as faulty; but onely show the difference. I rather follow this sense, because it will fit the day of Judgement better, if the words be read by way of absolute affirmation, (they fhall be feattered, &c.) than by way of bare imprecation Truly that is the time, the onely time, of which we can politively

But God doth; and cannot fo peremptorily determine, who are wicked, or godly, before God, and who not; that it is not al-wayes very fafe for us to judge. Were it otherwife, that God did alwayes judge and reward in this world, there would be no need of faith, or hope : or at least, faith and hope would be of another value, than we are made to believe : not of things future, and invisible; but of things present and seen. So that the very foundation of our Religion, would be altered; there would be more Religion, and fear of God in the world, queftionlelle, (had God appointed it fo from the beginning) than there is; but it would have been guilty of another nature, and upon other grounds. that rideth upon the heavens] So Vatablus, and Calvin, in nubibus; velin celu: and Aben Ezra confirms it from verle 33. To him that rideth upon the heavens of heavens; the Chald, qui sedet fuper folium glorie, as Genebrard expresses it : Junius, qui insidet amanitatibus. Others, in defertis, in the deferts : which fignification is as proper to the word as any other, and though it be not Efayes word, (במרבר is his word) yet may the fenfe very probably, (as upon the former word hath already been observed) productly, (as upon the former word main arready person between the fame in both places, Elay 40.3. The voice of bin that eyeth in the wilderness. Sc. The Septuagint also render it, and δυσμά: which although by the old Latine it be translated. Super occasum; according to the more proper and usual notion of the Greek word Juruds: yet by comparing with divers other places, of their Translation, it may appear that by dusubs, they intend fometimes the defert: as by some here is well observed And if there be any weight in Aben Ezra's observation from the 33 verse; for the former opinion and interpretation, as much may be faid for this from thole words of the leventh verse, when thin didft march through the wilderness. According to this inter-pretation, that rideth, (the Ark being meant, as generally throughout the Psalm: which was also called God: whereof see more upon P(al. 27.8, Seek ye my face, &c.) is as much as, that is carried: and by deferts, we must literally understand, either some deserts, or desert places, properly so called, through which the Ark had formerly, or was now to pals : or more generally, any rough unequal wayes, for the honour and reverence of him that was to passe through; (as for a great Prince, upon some so-lemn occasion, either of triumph, or the like, useth sometimes) now to be levelled and made plain And to that purpose are the words of Efay also, which some bring to explain these: Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be mad watery man be exacted, and every mountain and mit plan of most low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough slace plain, Etay 40.4. Now for the my slical and spiritual meaning, at the words are applyed to Christ. coming in the sless, and to the operation of his Word and Spirit upon the foul, of men, &c. though by some insisted upon here also; as among the reft, by Diedat, (whose Notes having relation to his Translation, different from ours here, should not have been exhibited without it, nether here, nor any where elfe, where different; as too often it is in the late English Translations; to the great puzzling & any diligent rational Reader) yet I do not conceive it fo pro-per and necessary, in these Annotations. Indeed, where the fpiritual meaning proves to be (as fometimes; of which upon Pfalm 22, and elfewhere) the most proper and immediac; that is, literal; the cafe is otherwife: but that is not our cafe hat.

by his Name 7AH] Though to speak properly, there is but she God, that is the true God; yet because there he many that are called and accounted Gods, besides the true; as the / possible ells us in a place : The Pfalmift here would not have us to praife God in general onely, but more particularly, the true God; the God of firsts: (Total all peoples the carts may fame the Mane, and far the en double by people lifact, 2 Chron. 6, 333) known and discrete from other imaginary gods, by 1 is Name [All. Wherein I do not conceive that the Pfalmitt had a refrect fo much to do not conceive that the Pfalmitt had a refrect fo much to the derivation of the word, wherein is an intimation of true Being, or Existence, proper unto God onely, in opposition to whatfoever elfe is faid to have a being, whether men or Angels; whole being is but an imperied and improper being, if compared to Gods: and again, proper unto the true God, in opposition to idols, and imaginary gods: all which, though most true, yet is not fo obvious to ordinary capacities: not fo much to the derivation, I fay, as to the common use and notion of the word 7AH, as it was used both by Jews and Gentiles. For even among the Gentiles, the God of Israel was known anciently by that Name: but that they pronounced it JaO, in flead of JaH. So Diod, Siculus, an ancient Greek Hiftorian, (one of the best and most accurate, but that we have but little of him remaining) dorth clearly testifie, and he calls him Mofes bit God; or, the God of Mofes And besides him, Macrobius, an ancient Latine Author, though fome ages after Christ, yet a man wholly addicted to the old Gentililm, and very well verfed in ancient Mythology, or Theology he records an ancient Oracle, confitting of five Greek veries concerning the Name JAO, or as there written in Greek, IAO. And moreover he bears witness, that one Cornelius Labeo, an ancient Roman, did write a Book concerning that Oracle, inscribed, De Oraculo Apollinis Clarii. Now this Name JAH being but an abreviation of JEHOVAH, and the fame in effect; that there is in it fomewhat extraordinary, may appear by Gods own words, Exod. 16,2,3. by the Name of El Shaddai (or, God Almighty) was I known unto them; but by my Name JEHOVAH was I not known unto them: and by Elay 42.8. I am JEHOVAH; that is my Name; and my flory will I not give to another, notifier my praife to graven image. But what that is, and what is the genuine meaning of those places, would be a long question: for which I must refer the Reader to the learned Expositors there. But another question will be, not impertinent to this place, whether the ancient Romans, when they transferred this Name JAH, or JEHOVAH, to their Tovis, or Tove, may be faid to have communicated it to their Idols. Not to make a long bufinelle of it which would not be very pertinent here: I fay briefly, that for the manner of the worthip, they may be faid to have made an I dol of their I upiter indeed but for their opinions, that which they fay of him, the more fober of them, especially in their prayers and supplications, is, for the most part, very agreeable to what the Scripture faith. We ence it is that the Apostle, Act. 17.23. makes no scruple to apply a pallage of an ancient Heathen Poer, concerning Jove, (Aids was the word in the Poet) as they did call him, to the true God, JEHOVAH.

V. 7. O God, when thou wentest forth before thy people | This and the next verse are taken out of Deborahs song, Judg 5.4,5. but sitted by David, with some little alteration, for his purpole. All tends, in a Poetical strain and style, to set out the glory and Majefty of God, which although in himfelf, at all times equally great and glorious, yet to man he doth appear then most, when he doth fome great work among them; as was the deliverance of the Ifraelites out of Egypt. Now because no man can comprehend the greatness of God, estentially, and naturally; (this very word of nature, being but improperly spoken of God;) and that even what the wifer fort of men can apprehend of God, is above the reach of the vulgar; he is therefore, more furably to vulgar capacities, metaphorically, and allegorically fet out, under types of things incurrent to the fenses, and which are most apt to move the

V. 9. Thru, O God, didft fend a plentiful rain] Because we do not finde that these words have reference to any particular time, their translation therefore is to be preferred, (for to either the words in the Original are indifferent) who render it by the prewas in the Original are manuerency who render it by the pre-fin, Thus, O God, dolf fend, &cc. whereis thou doft confirm, &cc. when it weary: which may be underflood of every years rain, and in very deed, this of the rain was a thing to considerable to that Country, that as it was promifed as a special blefling, Deur. 11, 13, 14, 15. [end] Heb. Shake out. confirm] Heb. confirmit. inheritance | Deut. 11, 11, 12.

V. 10. Thy Cangregation hath dwe't therein] The Hebrew word In fignifies also beafts, whether wilde or tame. Some therefore here translate it, Pecus tuum; by which nevertheleffe, they understand men, the Israelites: which is in effect the same as here, Thy Congregation. But others render it, Oves, or Armenta; and expound it of cattel, both sheep and other; it being one of the thief commendations of the land of Canaan, that it abounded with cattel. But the following verb, importing dwelling, is more of theep, or any other cattel. Somewhat to this purpole, but more general, we have Pfal, 107,36,37. He turneth the wildern fe into a fluiding water; and dry grounds into water-figures; And there he maketh the hungs to dwell, that they may prepare a city for habitation, of thy goodness[2] God blelled the land of Canaan, because he had chosen that place for his Church: or, in reference to the foregoing paffiges, it may be understood of Gods goodness in providing fo them, and refreshing them in the wilderness.

V. 11. The Lord gave the word, great was the company of those that published it.] The sense of these words, though not so obvious at first fight, at least as here translated; yet is certain enough, and which is not ordinary in obscure places, among Expostors, generally agreed upon. It must be sirst conceived, that bleshings and mercies of feveral kindes, fome paft, and fome prefent, are here remembred. Having therefore spoken of Gods bleffings upon the land it felf, he palleth to the remembrance and commemoration of some notable victories and deliverances. Some think that David in these words had a respect to his own times, and those many victo ies he had obtained upon his enemies by Gods special fayour: which is like enough. But however, the words are fo gene-ral, that they may relate to former times also: neither is any order of time observed in this song, but several things promisenously set down, as sit matter for such a solemn and general thanklgiving, being digested and put together, with more regard to the Verie and Poeme, than Hiftory. Matters of great importance, that are atchieved abroad, are often fet out and personated in the Scripture, under the Projopopaia of poffs and mellengers; which is very poetical, and of great force to affect the fenfe with a conceit, partly of the fuldennels of the thing; and partly of the fuspense expectation of men. Whether it be upon a dismal or joyful occasion, we have examples of it in both kindes. One post shall run to meet another, and one meffenger to meet another, to tell the king Babylon, that his city is taken at one end, fer, 51.31. This was a fad occasion : but of a joyful, Efay 52.7. How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publifbeth peace, &c. Our Pfalmilt faith, The Lord gave the word; that is, he gave the occasion; it was his doing: good reason therefore he should have the praise of it. As if he would have said, which is to the same purpose, but more fully expressed. This is the Lords doing, it is marvellous in our eyes, This is the day the Lord hath made; we will rejoyce and be glad in it.

great was the company of these that published it] All Interpreters I have feen, but one excepted, take this company of maids and women entertaining these good news with longs and melody; as the fathion was in those dayes rather to make use of women to that purpose, than of m:n. For which we are referred to Exod. 15, 20, Judg. 11. 34.
1 Sam. 18 6. To which some add, Jud. 5, 11, To this also might those words in Efayes mellige have reference. The virgin, the daughter of Zion bath despised thee,&c. Esa. 37. 21. That which hath moved them to think of wom in here (for as the words run in English, men might be understood as well; neither can it be well otherwise, except the word women or maids, had been added to the Text) # because the word in the Original Heb, FTITUID is a Feminine, But on the other fide it is objected, that the Scripture no where calleth fach, Fundad, Publishers of good tidings. For fo indeed the word might have been express, as the Greek renders it, '3: ἐνση [ελι-ζιμ 10.5: (in the Dative there, hecause of Δώσει, to which it is joined) that is, publibers or messingers of good tidings, and so the word is translated in that forequoted passage of Elay, show beautiful upon the mountains are the seet of him "UDD that bringeth good tidings ; and 110 1010 that bringeth good tidings of good in the lame place, and if fo here too, I think it had not been amifs. The fenfer had been the plainer. No ther is it without example, that a word Feminine thould be put for a Masculine. So Diriz commonly translated Ecclefiastes, or, ? he preacher, is a Feminine too; though. it be intended of a man, as appears, Eccl. 1.1. The words of the Preacher, the fon of David, King of Jerufalem, and divers other places, where it is joined with a malculine. Besides, the Septuagint took it for a Masculine, Jose evay sand popularies: as before; and so the Chaldee Parphrase, (though quite to another purpose) in Genebrard, Deus dedit verba Legis populo suo, ministerio Mosis de Aaronis, qui primi nuntiaverunt verbum Dei exercitui magno Ifraelis; that is, (for that exposition, though much different from the common, is not altogether impertinent) Godgave the words of his Law to the people, by the ministery of Moses and Aaron, who fust published the word of God to the great Congregation of Israel. This I consels, though I find but one to join with me, I think most likely, that the words should be intended of men rather publishers, posts and mellengers, or the like, as upon the former words hash been thewed; than of the women-fingers, Yet I am not against the common interpretation; neither is the difference of moment, as to the fense and loope of the words; and in the myllical fenfe, which some make their chief bufiness here, I would rather say with some, that therefore women are here mentioned, because in very deed the best news that ever were brought and published unto the world (to wit, the news of Christ his refurrection of which ours depends) were first brought by women; which was notwithout a mystery, as learned "x-Proper of a Congregation of men, as the word is often used; than | positors tell you then as others, that therfore the seminine gender is yea for the rebellions also] Literally, referred to Davids victories, yea for the rebellions and Licensis, reterring to Daywas videoies, or any other videoies of the Jews in former ages, the meaning must be; that not ordinary enemies onely, which soon yielded themselves; but even the most averse and rebellious, have been fubdued, and led in triumph, and made part (many of them) of Gods people. But the mystical meaning, of Christ, his Conquest. and the Gentiles coming in, by the preaching of his Minifters, Apoftles, and others, is more proper, and in a manner, more literal here; and in all this verse: as it is applyed by the Apostle, Eph, 4.8. wherefore that is here received, we finde given; and gave gifts unto men: which may feem different. But certain it is, as may be proved by many examples, that the word Mp7 fignifies often to give, as well as to receive; that is, when a thing is received, or taken (which is the proper fignification of the word) to begiven. hen (which is the proper fignification of the word) to begiven, and so its English, among humap, take m, for give me. Which confirms their interpretation, who make God himself to be specified to, not David, or any other; of which see upon the former words; Thus hold sended on high. For though the word 1737 may bear both interpretations, both of giving, and reteiting; yet that of giving would not fit here, if the words were intended of any other, than God himfelf.

The word in the Original Drong, here translated their counsel, and in the margine, their company, because no where else to be found in the Scripture, is somewhar obleure, and by divers differently translated. The greater part take it to fignific a company, because it comes of a root that fignifics ship observes, that is, to some odeath; which is one commonly by calling multitude of floors. But it would trouble a man more to give a latiffactory reason, why these 4. Tribes, and no others are mentioned;

whereas no man makes any question, but that all the Tribes per-formed their part, and had an equal interest in this solemnity. 1 normed their part, and mad an equal interest in this folematry. I think they speak beft to the purpose, that bid us not to be over curious. It is not possible, where the story is so compendious, to give an account of all circumstances; without the perfect knowledge whereof, many places mult of necessity, in such allusions tenge whereof, many places mint of necestry, in that animons upon the by, be obscure, and unknown. It may be the heads of those Tribes were imployed in the managing of that business, more than others. Some must; all could not. But this is but a gueffe, and many other things may be gueffed with as much cafe. and probability. What is faid that may feem to have some ground is, That those tribes, some of them, stood out against David Iongeft, and therefore of purpose mentioned, that we might know he was now in full and quiet polleffion. And moreover, that two of these Tribes, Benjamin and Juda, were neerest of all to Jerusalem; Zabulum and Naphtali the furthest off: that therefore by naming these; all the rest are comprehended. Now for the mynaming their, all the text are comprehended. Now for the my-fikial linels, how the words are applyable to the Apollies; which articles, who most infift upon it, if any thing can be faid to that purpose, every fatisfactory, will best fastishe. For of late Interpreterers, from I feet, that follow most the myflical fenfe, are glad here to flick to the literal, and padle the other over in filence.

V. 28. Thy God hath commanded thy firength] So Deur. 28. 8. and elsewhere, God is said to command the bleffing: Psalm 42. 8. command his loving kindness; Plalm 42. 4. to command deliverances, Plal 71.3, 10 give commandment to save, and the like. The expression is very proper, because Gods Word, is his deed. He need but to speak, and the matter, whatever it be, is done. So Pfal. 33. 9. For he spake, and it was done : he commanded, and it stood fast. Longinus, a heathen, but one of the most judicious ma-flers of Rhetorick that ever was, admired the sublimity of this expression in Moses: and had Epicurus, that arch Atheist, well understood this, he would have forborn his ridiculous objections, (one of his chiefest grounds for denying of a Providence) concerning Gods perpetual toyl and inquietude in the Creation, and ning Gods perpetual toyl and inquetuee in the creation, and administration of the world. But the Centurion in the Gofpel, he underflood it, (for which he was commended and admired by Chrift) when he said to Chrift, Lord, I am not worth, that they flow in the content of the world only, and my fervant hall be healed. For I am a man under authority , &c. Matth. 8.

V. 29. Because of thy Temple at Jerusalem This is differently translated. Most Interpreters soin these words, in their explications, though parted in the Text, as here, with the former words to fend help from thence. And fo God himfelf fpeaks fomerimes. And some that translate propter, or because of , as it is here; yet join the words with the former nevertheleffe, as if he prayed, That God would be gracions and merciful unto them, for his Chur-ches sake. But on the other side, because it was an ordinary cuflome among all Nations, where any Temple, for the holinefle of it, and for the credit of the Deity to which it was confectated, was of renown, thither to bring and fend many prefents; which was done by great men and Princes especially: and of gifts and prefents fent from forrein Princes to the Temple at Terusalem, we read in the second of Maccabees, Chap. 3. 2. particularly, and elsewhere: besides what we find in Elay 18.7. In that time shall the prefent be brought unto the Lord, &cc. according to some : for the prejent we orange in the ine Lina, acc. according to some sor the fe reasons, it may do as well, that the words be referred to that which follows; Because of thy Temple at Jerusalem shall Kings, &c. Either sense is warrantable enough: The Reader may take

V.30. Pebuke the company of spear-men, the multitude of the bulls, &c.] The continuation of so many metaphors, (especially if the first words be translated word for word, the beast of the reeds, as in the margine) hath made the verse to found rather like an Enigma, than ordinary language: the last words excepted which contain as it were the folution, or explication of the riddle. So that a I the obscurity is rather in the dresse, than in the matter and substance it self : neither is there any disagreement among Interpreters about the meaning, but what the ambiguity of one word, as we shall see when we come to it , hath made. But that which I most wonder at, is, that none of the interpreters, as many as I have feen, take any notice at all of the coherence with the former words and verle; which I conceive very confiderable. Thus herefore it is, as I take it; David; as himself declareth, I Chron 22.7, &c. had purpole to have built a House unto God God would not have it fo ; But the word of the Lord (fo David himself as his own words are recorded in that place) came to me, sying, Thu hast speed to dabundantly, and hast made great wars; then shall not build an House unto my Name-because the shift shed much blood upon the earth in my sight: behold, a son shall be born unto thee, who shall be a man of rest, and I will give him rest from all his enemies round about, &c. David therefore having in the verse before mentioned the Temple, (whether by it he understand, by a prolepsis or anticipation, that very Temple that was to be b. ilt after him, as fome; or that Tabernacle, which himself had built for the Ark; will not be much material: though it be more likely, be-Ars; will not be much material: though it no more likety, nocaule he prophoches of things future in the verife following, which lath telerence to this, that in this also he intended the future Temples; having therefore, and I faid, in the verfe before, mentioned the Yemple, and his thoughts being fet upon it, with that carriemthes that became his zeal, whereof eeu upon I alan 27, 8. Seek ye my face, &c.) and knowing that the hoafe he intended unto God, must be the fruits of a quiet Estate and settled peace he turns his speech, as was most proper and likely, in a serious dete-flation of war; which certainly though he were a great Warrior, flation of war; which certainly though he were a great Warrior, and a valiant man, yet as a good and religious man, he never did affect: he in his zeal to Gods Houfe, knowing what he did, he must of necessity so much the more detest and abhor. Now we come to particular words; By the beast of the reeds, most underfland men arm d with spears or arrowes : either of whith . either spears or arrowes, the reeds of those Countreys will make. In Latine we know, that arundo, (a reed) is commonly taken for an arrow. Yet there be, who think by the beaft of the reeds, voluptuous, proud, insolent men, may be understood; such as live in fertile foils, and in great plenty of all things. That reeds grow, and are an argument of fertile loyls, they refer us to Elay 35 7. and a least all guarant on tentuc wysts, truey treet us to zumy 3 7.7. in the habitation of dragons, where each lust plate by each with reads and rubber. But the more commonly received interpretation agrees bett with that which followes; By bulls, (which followes) are underflood the leaders and chief Commanders by cakeey, the ordinary Souldiers and followers, in the next words there is more difficulty, which they one submit binself with pieces of filore.] Hebrew 900 1871 DSTOOD by some translated, calcantem in single, argenti; that is; treading (or, walking) in peices of filver: as belong-ing to company, before. And by this, they understand men proud-ly arrayed, with filver in their shoes, or other cloths; which, then, or in those dairs, though afterwards, as many other things of that nature common and ordinary, might be an argument of great pride and excels. Or, as form-others, which he in plates of filver; which they understand of beds and seelings; for which they refer us to Eith. 1. 6, and Job 22 24. But this doth not so well here, and the expression is without example. Yet against them that make this DOTOD an accusative, and translate it , submittentem te, or fingentem fabricare, as some do, Calvins objection is pertinent, that he need not pray against them, if they had already fubmitted : or mention them as already fub jefted, and yet pray a gainst them. But as most Rabbins supply the words, dum suppliset quisque; that is, as we have it here, until every one submit him-felf, so, that objection is prevented, and the sense that is made of it is very proper and pertinent : To submit them selves with pieces of filver, that is, to pay tribute, or to feek peace by prefents. which I took not away Though I would not find fault without which I took not away Though I would not high it as little as I cause, much less condemn, yet I wish (which is as little as I can say) that our English translators here had kept more strickly to the propriety of the Hebrew word, which fignifieth to robb, prothe propriety of the Hebrew word, which fignificath to robb, pro-perly; or to take away by force and violence, as prey and booty, and fo I find it, not in the antient Greek only, a out, signor and but in moft Latine translations, whether Old, or late; que'd on, que'd, non raph: fee Vetullius, Junius, Calvin, baccuts; and o-thers believe. Nor that I would make a mystery of it, as fome do, who analythic non-most of the Child. thers a delieve. For that I would make a mystery of it, as folial do, who apply this very word to Christ, who though be thought it no robber; to be equal with Gid, Phil. 2:6. yet was by the Lewes hated, perfecuted, and delivered into the hands of infidels; for hasten, peticeuteen, and activered into the names of innotes; for this crime especially, and chiefly, beauth len, made himfelf equal with God, John v, 18. Therefore the Jews fought the more to left him Sec, and 19, 7, We have a Law, Sec. Not but that even this very well, at the words of Sr. Paul are commonly expounded, be allowed of too, fince that all Expositors apply the words to Christ in general, who though he had committed no fin, &c. but because I am of another opinion my felf concerning the meaning of these words whereof somewhat occasionally hath been said upon Psalm ver. 62. 10. become not vain in robbery : not for that reason. There fore, I say, or at left, not for that onely: but also because in my judgement, it doth obscure the coherence, with the former words; and obscure too the literal immediate sense of these very words; upon which, as I conceive the coherence doth depend, The words before, in the Original Hebrew, and in most other translations, I have feen, run thus : they that would deftroy me are mighty: (in the Hebrew words there is an allusion, and that is one reason too, why they should not have been parted) being mine enemies without cause, or wrongfully : that which I had not robbed : nemes without casts, or wrong stuty: that which i, had me robbed of taken and carryed away by force; then did I reflore. Now I covice it very probable, that the Pfalmist having faid that they were his enemies without cause, he intended what followeth as a casion or further explication of what he had faid; to this purpose that although they had nich lim as a robber indeed, forcing him explore that salts follow prome all these had dislated; trat aimough they had nice min as a rower indeed; forcing him to reflore; that is, feiling upon all that he had violently, pre-tending, &c. Yet certain he was that he had done no fuch thing, as should deferve fuch ulage. In antient times when men lived in greatest simplicity, in tents more, than in Towns; and their wealth consisted in cattel especially : all differences almost, and controversies that did atise between men, and produced strifes, and force of arms, were about bealts, pretended to have been unjuffly feired, and driven away. From those times fundry expressions were derived, frequently used in a feet ages, when the world was much altered. As for example, the Grecians in Homerstime, and long after him, to say, that they had done a man no wrong, nor given him just provocation, used to say, that they had never driven away him just provocation, uted tolay, that they had never curven away cither ox, or also files, so we find it 15 am. 1. 1.3, 1.00, Whole oxe have I raden, &c. but that divers others exprellions, favouring of lacer times, that those formerly fooken of, are there added but the Greek expression, literally first, and then afterwards proven bigly under the control of the c mon speech of these times, both to express his own innocency in general; in further confirmation of what he faid, that they were his enemies wrongfully, or without cause:) and what violence and in justice he fuffered from others, whether in his person, goods, for otherwise.

V. 5. O God, that knowest my solithmis, and my sins, dye.] Some Antients have been much troubled at these words, and devised ways of Interpretations, how to make them applyable to Christ: grounding upon this. That because they knew certainly by the apgounnang pon times, nat pecquie tiev knew certainly of the an-ification Chift his Difciples and Apoffles made of them, fome wore, of the Platin belonged unto Christ: therefore all must like wife. In pecellity of which confequence, as we have already and upport the acc octainn, (whereof fee upon Pfalm 40.6. mine ears half thou opened; in the end there) I do not understand If that were fo, than it must be considered, whether it be not the same reason for chapters in the Prophets, as is here for particular psalms; if Christ be spoken of in a part, that he must be the subject of the vyhole; and then it vyould much concern us to knovy both of whole: and then it would must concern us to snow both of Chapters and Pfalms, whether they be alwaics rightly divided; the division of the one, as now divided, being in comparison, but of late invention; and that of the others, nor alwaiss very certain; of which fomewhat hath been faid upon the Title of the first of which fomewhat hath been faid upon the Title of the first pfalm, upon those words, Pfalm first. But however as for these words we are now upon, they might have spared their trouble, and we out care for a further answer; if the words be the tightly understood. For certainly, his purpose here was not to accuse, but to justifie himself, as he don't often (whereof see upon Pfalm 18, 10, 11). The Lord rewarded me according to my righteoufnels, &c) against his enemies; to which end, to make his protestation the more solemn and serious, he doth appeal to God, the searcher of hearts, for his witness So best Interpreters here, Calvin; Mollerus, Junius, and others. And the very coherence besides might induce us to believe it so. For though David had his fins, there is no question, and he freely acknowledge it himself elsewhere, more than once; yet this was no very proper place for this acknowledgement, fo abrupt and so short, without any apparant coherence or dependence on that which either goes before or followeth, Sothen, Than knowest my foolishaese, &c. that is, Thou knowest whether I be guilty of any fuch thing; or no, &c. But fince it is recreased in the Annel II. Verfe 1. Make hafte] This platmagreeth with platm 40. From twice to be found in this book, and of final differences to be found upon comparing 3 fee upon Platm 53, ver, 1. The field haft field. As for this Platm, the most confidentiable difference is in the latt verse, But I am poor, &c. of which see thece. In all the rest, there is no difference to be observed, but that some words (none very material) of pfalm 40, are here left out. As for example, in this first verse, the very first word, TIST be pleased, Pla.42.13. He pleased, O Lord, to deliver me : for which we find here in our English make hafte, supplyed from the words next following. But it being apparent that this Pfalm is the fame with Pfalm 40, from verfe 13. if any thing at all be to be supplyed, to make the sense period: (which it may be, needs not : the order of the word in the Original Hebr. is : O God, to deliver me ; to help me, O Lord, make hall 1 which most interpreters, without any further supplement, content themselves with:) but however I say, If any thing be supplyed, I should think nothing more proper, or warrantable, than what we find Pfalm 40.13, which verfe there doth answer to this. However this here more warrantable than either Greek or Vulgar latin, where somewhat else is supplied, taken from neither place: but not so, as to make any considerable diversitie of sense; much less than what is here supplyed. Which nevertheless was to be noted, because in matter of text, there is no diversity so inconsiderable in in it faf, but may be confiderable to some respects and purpo-

make haste to help] A godly man in extremity of diffrest may call upon God earnestly to make haste to his deliverance; there is no hurt in that : nay God is well pleased with our earnestnesse, and fometimes we reap the fruits of it (for absolutely and generally it is never without fruit) present help and deliverance, according to our own desire, and the intention of our prayers. But provided fill, that in our earnestness, there be a resolution of patience, and submittion to God; with a certain belief and affurance, that Godstime, be it fooner, or later, is, and will be our best time, though present sense, (because no affliction, or, chasting for the present seemeth to be joyous, Heb. 12. 11.) and weak slesh ingest the contrary. So may we reconcile this of David here, with that of the Prophet Elay, He that believeth, shall not make haste, 28.16. which though fome by a kind of metalepfis, or metonymie, translate otherwife, fhall not be forlorn, or shall not go aftray: yet I am (with best Interpreters) For the literal both translation and interpretation of the words: fhall not make hafte, that is, shall notwithstanding any earnestness: of prayers, with patience wait Gods time and leisure: as David himself elsewhere protesteth of him-self, (that we may reconcile David with himself also) that he waited patiently : Plalm 40. 1. As for the Apostles (whether St. Paul, Rom 9, 32. or St Peter, 1 Pet. 2. 6.) quotation of these words, He (or, whosever) believeth in him, shall not be confounded or albamed: in case the difference were greater than it is; yet the scale fitting his present purpose, and being warranted by divers other places of Scripture, it is not to be wondered at, if he followed the Greek translation of the Septuagint, being most currant among the laws of those daies: and indeed the only Scripture divers of them, which understand not the Hebrew tongue, living in forain Countreys, read and understood. But I do not conceive the difference to be fo great as to conclude with fome very learned men, that the faid Seventy read שביו for שווי (who also would have that to be the true reading) there being so much affinitie in the nature of the things, between making hafte, and aminite in the haute of the tings, between macying majes, and being affiamed, or confounded, as that the putting of the one for the other, doth not, of necessity, import a difference of sense; especially as the words may be used in some language though they be not fo in all, ασχημεσύνε (to which ευσχημεσύνη is opposed) is used by the Grecians for impatience, frequently (ασχημενείν, έυσ γ ημογείν, &c. likewife) though the word properly import no more than undecent behaviour. See also upon Plalm 34. last ver. that truft in him: &c. But to return to the fense of the words of the Prophet, which we faid we intended to reconcile with those of Davids, that we are now upon: which may be thought need. lefle, and impertinent, if the words (as some would have it) were intended by the Prophet in another fenfe; I will produce a very warrantable (both for his antiquity, and learning) Interpreter of the Prophets words, to wit, the Author of the book com-monly called Ecclefiasticus; My fon, saith he, if thou come to serve The Lord, So, Set thy heart aright, and confinantly ender and make not halfe (sg lat) returned to keep not halfe (sg lat) or stown to keep a set appear to halfe (sg lat) or stown to keep a set appear to halfe (sg lat) or stown to keep a set appear to his chooses, or set appear to half a sp robably, the Prophete in his thoughts; to it was (from the Prophet, originally, perchance) become a common freech among the faithful; Not to make hafte in time of trouble : Which also doth well vindicate the true reading of the Hebrew Text we have, from that suspirion, we have spoken of.

V 2 Deliver me in thy righteoufnefs Keeping thy promife to me, and therein approving thy left just and righteous. So some here, and elsewhere very otten, as often almost, as David doth appeal by way of humble supplication to Gods righteousness; or doth applaud himself, and praise him, for his experiential knowledge of it upon particular occasions. Now, though Gods Truth be one of his most glorious and effential attributes, wherein keeping of promile is included, and fometimes particularly specified : and again though it be granted, that we may fometimes, David might at leaft, put God in mind of his promile, and call upon him, with humility for performance : yet that David would tell God of his righteeufness so often in this sense, that is, of his ingagement and obligation, with a tacit intimation, or inference, that had not God, or shoul I not God deal thus and thus with him, he were not righteous; fo often to tell him of it, as common interpreters make him; I do not know whether it aid stand with Davids modesty and civility so well: and much lesle, with his discretion and safety. For though we may be sure that God will keep his promise to us: yet all Gods promiles (as his threats) being conditional, as we are all Gods promises (as instructats) Design condutional), as we are taught very particularly, Erzek, 33, 13, When I fluid fly or the rightens, that he fluid fly or the rightens, that he fluid fly or the sec. who can for any pretime upon his own performances, as to dare (except it be done fipartingly, and with much hemility) to challenge God, as bound in jufficed But I will leave men to their liberies, where the coherence will be found that the second of the seco bear it. I am sure it will not in all places. As for example, be-sides the very place the subject of this observation; and ver. 15, 16, 19, 24. following; plaim 51. 14. and my tongue fball fing a-lou of thy righteenfinels: (it was besides Davids purpose there, to lou of the righteenfact: (It was befides Davids purpole there, to put God in mind of his promities 3 and Palin 143, 15, and in the righteenfact, that there is not not not not not the there is the there would therefore, that fince righteenfact, or rather the Hebrew word translated righteenfact, doth often fignife goodnefs, equity, year mercy, your entery: 1 know no reason why David, when he describe righteenfact unon God Go often, should not rather be understelled from the constant of the c flood in this general fense, more applyable to all men, and by consequence more comfortable; than with reference to particular romice. That the Hebrew word, which properly fignifieth ju-lier, or righteoune's, is taken not for goodness and equity only, lite, or rightendres, is taken not to gooanets and equity only, as in some other languages, words answerable to that; but or mercy also, in the precisely sense, so the property of the state of the sta Matth 6, I. myo or myo: habitationis, or, fortitudinis: because the bare word rock, or rupes, may imply fliength, without any further expression. But when he gives us his translation ad verbum rupem fortitudinis; and not supem habitationis; he makes it clear, that he read TYD and not TYD: which nevertheless (this latter I read TIVO and not TIVO: Which nevertheres (this latter I mean) is the reading in this place of all the printed Hebrew Bibles; have feen. And so Calvintoo, in the very Text, supim fortitudinis, and not according to the original habitations: by Junius, and some others, of our fide, well expressed and by Genebrard the Papift afferted : not without some reprehension of those he calls recentiores, for preferring that other reading. A man might suspect that their eyes, the difference being so imall. might deceive them; and the rather, because they give us no reason. But the matter is this. Pfalm 31 at the biginning, we have three verses, that agree with the three first of this Pla malnave three veries, that agree wan the three into or this Pia mal-most word for word. Now there it is 1910 fortind init, in all co-pies; and not 1910, and because it is there so, and that the veries seem to be the same, and that all the difference in the original words is but the drawing out of one letter a little more, or lefs: (an easie mistake, if men be not very wary) it is there-fore conceived, that, here also the same word should be. For my part, although I make no great matter, which of the two we read part, although I make no great matter, when or the two we read where the difference is fo little, either in the writing, or fenfe is left (in this place, at leaft;) yet is shall neither join with them, that keep to the proper; or at leaft, more generally received reading, Neither is that a warrantable ground, that because those three verses are almost the same, therfore they must agree in every word; for that we know they do not ; there be, even here other differences besides this, which no man dorh question. But of this argument in general, See more upon Pfalm 59. 9. Because of bu ftrength : towards the end of the Note, Now if any shall upon this grand, &c. and Plaim 34. last v. that right in him. And the body it declared to him that is not learned: Heb. to him that knowes not a body, or leiters, or numbers: 'And though ic be a fingular here, and a Plural in David i nay a Plural of another form 3 yet there being many examples of like irregularities, they may be accounted one and the fame word neverthelefs. It is generally conceived, that both the antient Greek and Latine aimed at this fense in their translation of these words; the one, our in ror year mareiae: the other expressing then, Non novol fiteraturem: as understanding David to this purpose: That he was not a Schollas, nor yet ambricus of much clearning: ho sonly business, which he proposed to himself; in stead of all learning, being this, to praise God, and to see forth; or magniss his power, his rightensings, See, Calvin is very angry with this translation, and tells us that Anabaptists, and Enthusi afts (he calls them fancies, men of diftempered brains) have made advantage of it, to cry down all good learning, and to inveigh a-gainft the use of liberal sciences. And well may be call this use, or fense of the words Anabaptistical, or more truly, Diabolicall, from that spirit that works in men of that profession, to the undermining, of all true religion; and promoting of atheifin (if once they become absolute mafters, as at Munster in Germany, and other places) or at the best of Turkism, which barely stands upon these two pillars, force of arms and banishment of human li terature. But I do not conceive the translation it felf deserves for rigid a centure, or can justly be charged to have been the ground n a rational account of fuch phrensies. For what if David had 1900 a rational account of their process, so to other, or greater than to be able to praise God? Must we make that construction of it, that therefore he despited learning; or rather this, that the only end he proposed unto himself of all learning, and of all sciences, to what degree of perfection soever he should attain in them, whether greater, or less, whether himfelf, or any body esse that depended of him; was, and ever should be, to glorific God; That as he accounted it perfection of learning to do this as it should be done (towards which as there is no kind of good learning, but may help: fo none fo great, but may be thought, infufficient: 2 Cor. 2. 16.) fo all learning without this use, though never fo great, or so compleat otherwise, but ignorance. Sure am, that lome heathers (as we commonly call them) very lear-med themselves, and great favorers of learning in others, have said little lels, Not to infiit upon inferior authors, as Seneca, and others that lived fince Christ began to be preached and known in the world: Divine Plato (not unworthily to stiled by all ages) in divers places reduces all human wildom, and knowledge to the knowledge of God, and godliness, Among others, in his Theatetus he (percm profily) maintaineth that whatfoever can be commendable in man-be it wildom, knowledge, prudency, eloquence, yea courage, for-titude, and the like is comprehended in the true knowledge of a juft God : and that without this knowledge, no vertue is vertue ; no commendation, folid and true. Hegi roulev rafe if as andar Subresavdedt, zai bude la rangi avardela, il use yag rourou moons (where some Latine Interpreters do Plate wrong, translating borum, for hujus; as clearly appeareth by the context) ooelea. &c. It is the opinion of most antient Fathers and other Christianwirers, that Plato was acquainted with the writings of Moses, and the Prophets. Whether it be so or no, I shall not here dispute. But it cannot be denyed, but that in that passage, and others like our it cannot be denyed, but that in that pallage, and other's like umon is, he may feem to have imitated the prophet Jer. Thus faith the Lord let not the wife man glosy in his wifeon 8cc. Jer. 9. 23,24. I fill I would, not mention later heathen authors, yet upon this fibiged I cannot altogether omit to make mention of one, both for his high degreehaving been a great Emperor in his time; and for the many pattages he hath to this purpole, (in leatning allo not inferi-our to any of the wifeft of philosophers that had been before him:) very considerable. But I shall content my self here with one of his fortest passages of this subject. Fi a'guri, faith he in a place: What will or may latisfie? what but to wor hip and praise the Gods: (that was the phrase in those dairs, though he often useth the singular alfo:) and to do good unto men? Anton, Beop v.27. Now if heathens though learned, and favorers of learning, could leak fo, without offence: why should not we construct and stavourably? Neither did St. Paul certainly, where he particled of himfolt, that he would from henceforth know nothing, but Chrift and him crucified, I Cor. 2. 2. intend by this (or fo understood by any lober man) a renunciation to learning either humane (whereof he had made a temperature to learning center tunnane (whereof he had made fo good ufe for the propagation of the Gofpel, as appeareth by his Epiftle, and what is recorded of him in Scripture History;) or other: but this, that what learning he had, power, facility, or ability in a kind, should all be imployed and improved to that end and use, to advance the knowledge of Christ crucified, I think such an argument should not be passed over slightly; and Calvins earnest-nelle hath made mathe more earnest. But now I must acquaint the reader with my fuspition, being grounded, as I conceive, upon no little probability. I doubt very much, whether the Greek Inter-preters, or Latin either, intended any such sense, as is commonly precess, or Latin either, intended any uten tenne, as its commonly apprehended for I would know firth what kind of word γραμμα-listes is, or by whom ever uted, (if at all ufed) for learning, or literature? That which may be faild for it, as 1 conceive, how it flout decome to fignific learning, is this, 1910 a Serible, is in Scripture Green's γραμμαθική. Now because these Sortibes are generally conceived, to have been very exact (by their profession act. left) in the knowledge of the Law; it may be, that this word γιαμμαλία was formed with reference to γγαμμαλίο, to exprefle fuch learning properly, as might belong to a Scribe, or lear-ned interpreter of the Law, However, Suidas, a man well acquainted with old Greek words, whether facred, or profane, understood it far otherwise, interpreting it, & Lapidanous; and gives a sense of the words, quite different. It may be read in him, if any be so curious: for it is very remote from that which is commonly received for true. But besides this , that reading year materas , is uncertain in some copies, it is negryparate, and accordingly in some Latine Copies, Negaliationes. Somewhat more might be said of that too: but I have said enough, for this place.

PSAL, LXXII,

Title.

A Plain for Solomon of, for, or, concerning Solomon tall these waies the Hebrew Tall W may be expressed; and accordingly opinions do vals; concerning both the author and the argument of the Pfalm. First for the author; there be that argument or the Piaini, Pint for the author; there be that afferibe it to Solomon, grounding especially upon the inferipetion, because as in the inferipetion of many other Pfalms, 7777 tion, because as in the inteription of many other Pfalias, "1717 is interpreted Davidis" (of David) for they think it should be here. But that rather shews, that notwithstanding the infeription be "10" 10" which by the article should rather be a Dative, than a Genitive; it may be solomens nevertheless, if there be other good grounds for it; then that it must be his, or probably is his, if nothing elle induce to that belief. That Solomon himself-month of sheet a bindess or that belief. That Solomon himself-month of sheet a bindess or the Michael Solomon himself-month of the sheet of himself-month of the sheet Iomon himself would so speak of himself, as this Pfalmist speaks of him; or that Godwould make him the inftrument of his own praifes, in such an hyperbolicall stile; is not very likely. own praites, in men an hyperbolicant mee; is not very merry. So that the full-field and tenor of the Pfalin, is rather an area ment againft that opinion, than for it. There is one Pfalimore, and but one, as I remember, for inferibed; and that is the 117. Pfalin. That Pfalm for the full-field of it, as it might be Solomons, so any bodies else: Davids, as probably, as any other, that hath not his name prefixt. And it may be it was composed by him, upon occasion of Solomons birth, as a thankfull acknowledgement of Gods blefling. By the subject of it, it flould be some Genethiacum, or congratulatory plalm for a new born child, whoever were the author. Neither then from that infeription there, can any argument be drawn, to prove Solo-mon the author of this. Why David rather, fomewhat may be months author or this. Why davia father; homewhat may be gathered perchance from the infection, in the best copies of the Greek translation, which we finde to be this; Eli Zazhen et al. (200 de presentation) and the second of David sand many Solomor: but more from that which is at the end of this many Solomor: but more from that which is at the end of this Plalm, v. 20. The prayers of David the fon of Jesse are ended. So much for the author, or infrument rather, and penned for of the principal author, the spirit of God, there is no quefor of the principal author, the lpirit of God, there is no question; and fo long, we need take the lefs care. But the fecond quere, concerning the fubjed, is a matter of more, if not difficulty, yet confequence to the right exposition of the whole Pelain. That Christ is the main, is a thing generally agreed upon among all Christians: but whether the onely, is the quefit. on. There be that make it a matter of great impiety, to think that any part of it belongs unto Solomon. Genebrard is of that any part or it belongs time solution. Centential is of that opinion; but not he only. Even among them that we account beft. Interpreters, 6me by their way of interpretation; may feem to have thought little loffe. Although therefore fomewhat from to have thought little loffe, Although therefore fomewhat hath been faid already to this purpole upon the 4; Pfal, partly upon the Title, and partly upon feveral verfes of that Pfalm, which both for the fubled, and for the fublimite of the filleam fwerable to the matter, hath great affinity with this: Yer because I find so much opposition here, fomewhat here also fittal be added. The main objection is, that most things in this Pfalm are too high, to belong to Solomon, or any mortall man. They put together what lover is not frait nature, which indeed makes the createst beart of the Pfalm; and then ask, whe-indeed makes the createst beart of the Pfalm; and then ask, wheindeed makes the greatest part of the Psalm; and then ask, whe ther this were literally true of Solomon. But they are much mistaken in their ground, as I conceive. For first, not to speak of the like figurative speeches in other parts of Scripture, lides Musa. &c. truly and really to be a Genethliacum carmen, upon the birth of a Noble Roman, much inferiour to a King, upon the buttu or a Nonie Roman, much mercua co army, because moth of it fits the Son of God much better; and in divers of his expressions, agrees with the predictions of the Prophets, concerning the future happy state of the world under the Messias? That his pen in very deed, was, by a secret providence; fo directed to fuch expressions, (whether he had them out of the Sibyle verses, or no) that should fit Christ fo well, and none properly and literally, but him, that fo Christ his birth day (for he wrote much about that time) might by the greatest of wits among them, who gloried in nothing to much as wit, be celebrated; hith been I know the opinion of very learned and judicious men, to whom I easily subscribe, Neither was this providence without a good effect; those very verses, as in all probability, and therefore much presided by certies, as in an propagatiny, and unetwore much prenea by one antience, having much contributed to the convertion of many, so Chrift. It is no good argument therefore against the literal fenfe of this Plalm, that because the Holy Ghost had the mannaging of the whole businesse, therefore all must had the mannaging of the whole businesse, therefore all must have been appropriate to the propagation of the state of the present the presen literally be true of Solomon; fince that the Holy Ghoft had a double intention in it, and as it was intended for a carmen Genethliacum, it was sufficient that it fitted then when it was written, according to the nature of the thing, and the prefent occasion; and was not to be fitted to the event of things in occanon; and was not to be interest of the event of things in future ages; which would have altered the nature of the thing, and of a Genethiacum, have made it a bare prophefic. Bit besides, was there not ground for these hyberbolicall expreflions from Gods own words and expreflions concerning Soprefitons from Gods own words and expretitions concerning So-lomon? I will the hir father, and he fluid be my fas, for, and think hade anothy lyngdom fluid be challified for ever Sam, 14, 8c. To fay, that here also Chirik was immediately and on-ly intended, were very firange, I know the Apolite doth ap-ply fome of these words, as well he mights, fince Solomon was his type, to Christ, Heb. 1. 5. But that is no argument come, that therefore Solomon was not immediately intended, to me, that therefore botonion was not municipately intended.

And certainly those words there, If he commit iniquity, Re, cannot well be applyed to Christ. But that in very deed, both here and there, Solomon was the immediate object of the here and there, solomon was the immediate object of the words, may be here made good, by good and irrefragable authority; by the application that is made of all there, and of many, yea, most things here, to David and his posterity, Psa.89, by the Holy Ghost, the right author, as here, to there. For there of necessity David, and his posterity, must literally be intended; or elic there were no ground for the enfuing exposulation, But or elle there were no ground to retaentuing expoltulation, But than half eafl off, &c. Except there also men will take the li-berty to turn all into allegories, to the destruction of the let-ter, and make the lasterings of Christ his Church, to be the tter, and make the interings of Christian Chief, the immediate object of those complaints. But that no lober rational man will do, o be persuaded unto by others, in these daies. If some of the antients have done it, it may the better oates. It tome of the animens have none is, it may the better born with in them. It was the way then in requeft, when the literal fenfs, for want of that knowledge of tongues, which hath been fince in the world, was more myflical and hidden, than that we properly call mystical, to expound all things allegorically. In the last place, for another respect too, I fay it is rically. In the last place, for another respect too, I lay it is no good confequence to argue from the event, against the literial fende, God had once passed his promise to Elys forefathers, that the Pricesshood should continue in their family for except hat that the Prientoon moune concame in their rammy preferantis, as long as the Temple it felf; and for fo long as that Hierarchy was to continue. It fell out otherwise. How hapned that God himself will tell us; I faid indeed that thy built, and the God himself will tell us; I fast macet that thy bulg, and he husge of thy father floudd walk, before me for ever, has now he lord faith; Be if he from me. For they that homer me, tillhomour, &C. 1 Sam. 3. 3. See also Enzek, 33, 33, When I flaid nour, &C. 1 Sam. 3. 30, See also Enzek, 33, 33, When I flaid of the they for the rightener, that he flaid furely lives, &C. And was not this Solomous cate? What could be dofte more by any manyout this Solomous? Let the promise of God, than was done by Solomous? for I will the promise of God, than was done by Solomous? That he repented, and found mercy in his own person, I will eafily believe, though not obliged by any direct Scriptures that easily betteve, though not conget by any direct oriputes days throw of: but if he did repent, it was after he had done enough and more than enough, to bring the curfe of God upon all his pofterity. David himfelf, nowithflanding Gods promifes to often reterated, and to absolutely passed unto him, proposed often reterated, and to absolutely passed unto him, proposed them in his last words to his fon Solomon conditionally; And keep the charge of the Lord thy God to walk in his water, that thou maiest prosper in all thou dost . That the Lord may continue his word which he space concerning me, sayner zura may continue un worta witten ne i paus contening mejoring, fit plo dificue nade heed et beite waters, to walk of per in truth, &c. 1 Kin.43. 4. And fo Pfal 133.13. If hy bildren, &c. All the fe things well confidered, the literal fenfe I hope will not be denyed ut 3 which needs nor much other illustration, not be denyed us; which needs not much other illustration, than the justifying of the hyberboles of it; which halt been our chiefest aim and businesse hitherer. And as for the myssical sense, as the words are applyable to Christ, there is nothing lents, as the words are applyable to Chrift, there is nothing of which any man can make any questions what of Solonon insendency and licerally, but hype-bolically, was intended; it is exactly applyable to Chrift, without any hyperbol; and that refered note literally and truly, than to Solonon; but in a prirtual funct hough, mort of it; though that too, not without four clieral and hittorical accomplifium;, as may appear by particulars.

mon; that is, to the worlds end; or for ever, as elsewhere V.8. He shall have dominion also from Sea to Sea; and from the re wr, &c.] Most Interpreters by these words, would have the bounds of Judea, and the Ilraelites Kingdome according to Exod. 33.31. Numbers 34. 3. &c. expressed: that is, from the Sea of Sodome, or the Red Sea, to the Mediterranean Sea(by some called mare Syriasum) East and West; and from the River, (that is, the River Euphrates, for the greatnesse and famousnesse, absolutely called, the River) to the great Defert, North and South, And this they conceive was accomplished in Solomon, of whom the story testi-stifieth in these words: And Solomon reighed over all Kingdomes from the river, unto the land of the Philiftines; and unto the border of Egypt, they brought prefents and ferved Solomon all the daies of his life, 1 Kin 4,24, and again, y.24, of the same chapter, For he bud dominion over all the region of this fide, &c. For my part, as I believe, that the words had immediate relation to Solomons perfon; fo to those quoted places too of the Law concerning the bounds of the Jewish Kingdom, that they have some reference, I will cafily grant: especially to Exod, 23. 31, which words come netrest to these. Yet when I consider that the words must have reference to Christ too, as all the Pfalm hath; nay that they are directly for applyed, and repeated of Christ, without any alteration at all i And I will cut off the chariot, &c. and he fhull fpeak peace unto the Han a ware on on the country occ. and we prain year, feder into the heathers, and bit dominion shall be from Sea even to fea; and from the river, even to the end of the earth, Zach 9, 10. I whole dominion (fpiritual) to confine within these narrow bounds, would not be to proper, nor fo agreeable, either to the predictions of other prophets, or to the event it felf : And again, that the words, Exo; 23. 31, are not fo like, but that fome confiderable difference may be observed: it being there, from the red fea, even unto the fea of the Philiftines, and from the defert unto the river; and here more absobutely, from fea to Sea, &c. upon these grounds I conceive it more probable, that an universal dominion over all the world is here comprehended and promifed. And it may be, from fea to fea, is meant, from South to North (for D) is fometimes taken from the South; as Pfalm 107.3.) and from the River (Euphrates, which was East of Judea, though according to the opinion of forme, we expounded it before, from the River to the defert, to be, North and uth) to the ends of the earth (or as the Septuagint, ens riga law South) to the ends of the earth (or as the Septingunt, see, ratge law fig stangalism; in the wilgst Latin, sighe at entimose obsterarum) is meant, East and Welf. Now it it be oppolicly that this was never use of Solomon, we aniswer as before, upon the title; first, that the expertition, as is usuall in these cases, is hyperbolical: second-ly, that cite quellion is not provity, what Solomo did actually enjoy, but what either by God might be promified conditionally; (neither did the Headhith Kingdome ever extend for far, as thole bounds allighed to it by God, in the Law, proper additionally as the solomes allighed to it by God, in the Law, proper additions. am ac precata; as St. Jerom in a place) or by the Poet, or poeticall author (the immediate we mean) might be wished unto him without trespassing against the Laws of that decorum, or beseeminguelle, (alwaies grounding upon fome apparent possibility, it not probability) to which all Poets and Orators are equally

V. 20. The prayers of David the sonne of Jesse are ended] This was his last prayer that he made for Solomon, a little before his was his lait prayer that he made for Solomon, a little before his death; or, the laft of those Pfalmes that David fet in order before his death, for the use of the Church. The rest were gathered together by others, as some of Solomons Proverbs were Proverbs 25. 1. fo 2 Samuel 23. 1. Now thefe be the last words of David: nor the last words that ever he spake, (for he both spake and did many things after that,) but the last that he spake as a Propher, to his fon Solomon, as learned men expound it there; and fome make those words there, an appendix as it were of this Pfalm here. From these words most collect that David was the author of the Pfalm : as it is very probable, if we take this note as referring, not to the foregoing Pfaltes in generally where this interaction is not to the foregoing Pfaltes in generally, where this is the 72. in number, and (according to that full Wrifton we have spoken of upon the first Pfalm, in the benining; and upon the 41, in the end) ends the fecond book of Plalma: but to this particular Plalm, and therefore taken into the body of it, as part of it. Yet there be, who think Dayid might utter the matter of it upon his death bed, by way of foleum benediction, in imitation of Jacob, Gen 49, and Mofes, Deut. 32, 33 David, in profe, and Solomon afterwards put it into verfe: and therefore both their names put to it, the one at the end the and therefore both their names put to n, the one at the ends the other at the beginning. But if as others, the note refer to the whole collection of the foregoing plalmes, (he called prayers, by a fynecholecthe paris pro two, as they call it) the argument will not be of so much force. Some Rabbins have made this sense of the words, Consummate sunt precess David, that is, say they: This is the fum of Davids wishes, in the accomplishment whereof he shall have his hearts defire. I mention it, not for the probability, but because some of the antient Expositors have somewhat to that purpose too.

A Pfalm of Asaph] Or A Pfalm for Asaph, of Asaph] See notes on Psalm 50, tit.

Verse 1. TRuly God is good to Israel; even to such as are of a clean heart. This abrupt beginning by an IN, which is asversativa particula, as they call them, and properly. fignifies veruntamen, or but 3 by some translated here, atqui: and this sudden determination of the businesse, before any further, arguing, may well feem somewhat strange: and puts Interpreters upon this conceit, that the Psalmith had been in a long conflict within himfelf, arguing the case to and fro, faith on the one fide, and the Devil on the other, doing their parts by turns; and at last, faith by the help of God having prevailed, he breaks out at laft, faith by the neigh of the naving prevained, he breakful of very joy, into this exclamative, or acclamative aftereation, Tinh, God, &c. As for the conflict, that is true enough: the author professes it afterwards, but that he was newly out of ir, thor protestes it atterwards, but that he was newly out of it, when he wrote this, and therefore thus abruptly begins, &c. it is but a fuppofition, which may palle for probable, until fomewhat more certain be found out: Whether this will be thought fo, that I am now to fay, I know not : but it hath more ground, I am fure, than a bare supposition. The antients, those that were very religious, were wont to speak of God, and those things were very rengious, were wont to preas or Uou, and none dange that belong unto God, not with reverence only, but with loane far-and teror alfo,left through ignorance and incapabilitythey floud utter any thing, that might oftend God either in the expedition, or matter. This Plato often profeders of binnleft; as in his Dialogue called Cratylus, in that one Dialogue more than once. But to called Cratifut, in that one Disaugue more than once. In cleave them: The Prophet Jermy upon this very this call of a holy zeal to Gods glory moved with indignation to fee the profiberity of the wicked, and purpofing to exploitate the matter with God himfelf, he makes his way by a previous acknowledgement of Gods righteoulnelle, Righteous art thou, O Ged, when I plead with thee, yet let me talk with thee of thy judgements, Jer. 12. 1, &c. So the Prophet Habbakuk too, Art thou not from everlafing, O Lord, my God, mine Holy One? &c. Thou art of putt eyes than to behold evil, and caust not look on iniquities: having faid to much by way of necessary premunition, he goes on boldly; where fore leokest then upon them that deal treacherously, and indest thy tongue when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteens than he? and maketh men, &c. See also on Plalm 89. 5. the heavens, &c. I conceive that here likewise the Psalmist being to treat of the fame subject, and having proposed unto himself this method, first to make his objections, before he came to his conclusion and answers; yet before he begin that bold and expostulative discourse he thought it necessary to premit this pacificatory and mitigative protestion, AN Asqui: However, Truly, &c. as if he had said, Whatever I shall say by way of argument that as it no mad had, whatever a mail tay by way or algument may feem contrary, I first profelle and protest, this to be my faith and firm belief, that God is just and good, and will deal accordingly with them that fear and ferve him with purity of heart &c. I have faid, what I ground upon: but it may ferve for further illustration to adde, that an antient Heathen Author, who, though he lived fince Chiff, had not the happiness to know Christ: but one of the most rational Heathens otherwise that ever was, and highly commended and admired even by Christians for his good life: (he was one of the Roman Emperours) having in few words, and with a great deal of modefly argued the cale, why the Gods, (fo he speaks, according to the wonted style of heathers though it appears by other places of his Book what he thought of the thing) had not made good and godly men immortal, he conthe thing) had not made good and goodly men immortal, in con-cludes, it in more because it is not for (if the the his is the not so indeed) be therefore consideren, that it is not not to it flouted be so. when thou awakest, thou shalt despise their image] Heb. שניה in suscitando: that is, in waking; without expression of the per-fon: which hath bred variety of interpretations; three, at the leaft; of which, which is to be preferred, because all warrantable by the Original words afording a good sense, and avouched by good Authors, is not casie to determine. Firth, in awaking; that is, (as here in the English) when thou awakis! When thou showest is, (as nece mixed enginn) when them awargit. When thou theyed thy power, hidden for a time, as a man awaking doth; Pla1.78.

65. Then the Lord awaked, so one out of fleep: and Pla1.7.6. awake for me to judgement: and 3.2.0. awake to my fudgement. Again, in waking, that is, when thou awakeft them, fay lome, that they may fee that they have been all this while but in a dream : that all their greatness, and supposed felicity was but imaginary. It is no small aggravation of their misery, that themselves, before they dye, shall know that they have been deluded all this while, they aye, man know that they have been acquared an time while, when they thought themfeles most happy; which must need end in great pangs and agonies of foul. Or lastly, in waking, that is, when thou awakest us, and shalt remove the cloud from before our eyes, that we may clearly see and discern the vanity of all worldly things: How quickly this life paffeth away, and every thing with it; how inconfiderable at the best; and by and every thing water in two meanmerance at the near 3 amon up confequence, how fortile we are 3 or 3 mindle! Ipeaketh after-wards, how fostilly and temants, yea, bruitly, that make fuch a material water of wicked mens worldly prosperity. This knowledge, thought of it felt incurrent enough into the eyes of men that have their eyes open: yet how apt we are, either to be lulled afleep by our own, or to be dazled by the temporal welfare and prosperity of others, so that we need Gods continual help and affishance to keep others, fo that we need Gods continual help and affithance to keep us awake, that is, in a right judgemen; appears by the Pfallation, who elfewhere expectly call upon God for it. So Pfal, 39.4. Lord made me to be not mane end, and the measure of my dayers, what it is, that I may fown how front I can. Though he make particular application of it to himless, yet he means it not of himself particularly, as though the defined to know how long he should live; but of all men in general, as appears by the 6, verse, Surely very than within him a stain thour, or according to the provinces of Reader may choose which interpretation he best likes. The sirst is most followed, and as I conceive, if there be any difference, most probable. There be both among the Rabbines, and Chrimolt probable. Incre de both among the Rabbines, and Chicains, that have expounded this awking, of the refuterchion of the dead, and day of judgement. And to the Chaldee Paraphrafe, in die judicii magni evigitabunt è domo fepulchri, in irà imacinem eo-rum despicies. Somewhat we have to that purpose, Plal. 49.14. The upright (ball have dominion over them in the morning, and their beauty, &c. by some there expressed, of figura corum: that is, their form, or figure. But the word is not the same in the Original: and being it is not the proper sense here, as the most and chiefest agree, we shall not need to take further notice thou fhalt defiffe their image] In awakning, thou, by these judge-ments, that spoil and destroy all these pomp, and goodly shew. Or, if in awaking, be referred to men; thou shalt despise, that is, thou shalt then shew them, and make them understand, by opening the eyes of the one, and awaking the confciences of the other, how vain and despicable a thing in very truth, all that pageant of worldly pomp and pide, and life it self, is. An Image is a thing to look upon; good for little elfe; and valuable for the outward appearance onely: though it be done to the life, and may deceive the eye perchance, yet it can have no reality of life. So is all worldly greatness and magnificence; which makes a shew, and paffeth away: well therefore, not here onely, but by ancient Grecians expressed by the word 10 mao, an idol, or image.

V. 22. I was as a beast before thee] A proper expression. For man, though he consist of a lumoratal nature, as the wifeft Heathens have alwayes taught and acknowledged: ver whileft he looks no further than this life, and confines his thoughts to that which is present and visible, he makes himself a very beaft; the chiefest and almost onely considerable difference between man and beaft, being this, that the one when it dieth, perisheth altogether; the other, not; but survives in his better part. And this may be the meaning of Ecclefiastes also, in those words of his, which seem to say the contrasy, as many untred into thy School, and learned by thy Word and holy Spirit, derstand them; I faid in my heart concerning the state of the fons of Pfal. laxiii. men, that God might manifest them, and that they might fee that they themselves are beasts; for that which besalteth the sons of men, be-falleth beasts. &c. Eccl. 3, 18, 19. that is, as I understand him, that Jaueth Deafit. &C. Eccl. 3. 18, 19. than is, as a uncertaing hims; has God would analyse them, (as we have it here) and make it appear unto them, that whileft they place all their happiness in this world, had think that when they die, all dies or expires with them; that and think that when they die, all dies or expires with them; that is in effect, as he don't further aggravate, (and that, ufting their own known words perchance, that they din that belief, as most in those dayes: whereof fee before upon Pfal 37-13;. and elsewhere) that which befalleth be fans of mer, (in point of death, that is) be falleth beefigs; even ant bing, &c. that whileth they foo believe and live accordingly, themselves become beaffs indeed. For why thould he defire God to manifelt that unto man, if that were it he intended, that their fools were mores! which the generality of men have always been and counder to believe, of themselves; and menaca, trus timer oans were morrar: when the generativy or men have alwayse been any enough to believe, of themicleves; and can fo hardly be effected of the contrary, even fince the contrary hath for any been recalled, and manifetted; as it been fine Christian appearance in the world? He hinfield, (Established Manifester) and the support of the contrary hath of the contrary has been fine Christian appearance in the world? He hinfield, (Established Established Stewards). clefiaftes I mean) explains himself afterwards, ver. 21, when he faith, Who knoweth the spirit of man that geeth appeard; and the spirit of beaft that gorth downward to the earth; by which words he puts a clear difference between the lpirit of man, and that of beafts; but that this difference, as he profefleth, doth not by any bealts; but that this difference, as he protefleth, doth not by any clear evidence, and demonstration, appear unto men r- and that God would manifelt it. For which cause also Cliritis said, as upon the said 37. 13. I am onitinately with thee] By faith I was affured, that the providence did watch alwayes over me, to preferve me, Plai.

63.8. Or, in my greateft troubles and affiliations, Thou wert preferr with me, by the inward comforts of thy Holy Spirit: far more farm with me, by the inward comforts of the Holy Spirit: far more thee] In thy account, O God. valuable, than any worldly joyes, as the best evidence and security of thy fatherly love to me, and an assurance of my suture happinels with thee, in a better world. So Luke 15.31. when the piners with thee, in a better world. So Luke 15.31. when the good fon, by reason of that extraordinary acception there expressed, the fatted calf, &c. thought himself less respected by his father, than his riotous brother; and bitterly tellified his indigna-tion for it, to his father: Lo these many years do I serve thee, &c. (which is just our case here, when we grieve & fret at the prosperity of the wicked, and think our felves neglected) the good fathers of the wicked, and think our felves neglected) the good fathers answer was; San, libe as tever (there, continually) with me: upon which follows a confequence: all that I have is thine. As if he had faid: By this thy heill with me, though thou finde it not for the preferen, and my discipline hitherto rellith more of severity, than found induspence can may the fure, and rely upon its discipline hither the property of the propert or any thing elfe, that hath been done to thy brother, or upon his oc-

V. 14. and afterward receive me to glory] See upon Pfal. 49 15, for he final receive me: by comparing of which passage with this the expression, both, and coherence of matter (in opposition to worldly prosperity) being the same in both; it may appear, that this glory property) peng me ame in pont; it may appear, mat tuis girdy was chiefly intended of eternal glory y which is more than will be granted by them that make a Perzetti of this Future, and turn it, cam glini acceptifi me; o with the vulgar Latine, cam glini acceptifi me; o with the vulgar Latine, cam glini a lifety pliff me; which flome interpret as if David, or Afaph for him, had glil me; which flome interpret as if David, or Afaph for him, had spoken of Gods exalting him to the throne of Ifrael. But keeping the Future tense, which we finde in the Original (though often, we confess, where the sense requireth it, used for the Præsent) in its proconsistent cuts can required square for the Praints) in its pro-per fignification, according to most linesprease; yet whether we must take in remporal honour and glony, as part of the meaning, is a further question. I would not deny it, because I see most lines preteres would have if to yet I cannot see sufficient reason to induce me to believe it. The whole context and tenor of the words in this and the following verles, seems to me to look another way: to wit, to oppose present spiritual joys & comforts and certain hope of eternal life, to temporal transitory goods and blessings: the proper goods and blessings of the wicked, as the matter feems here to be determined; not because they onely have them (God forbid we should think fo) but because they have these onely to trust to, and look for no other. The Chaldee Paraphraft follows this fenfe: In confilio tuo deduce me, in mundo ifto, &c. that is, Thou fhalt guide me with thy counsel in this life; and this life ended, wilt receive me to that glory, which thou hast pr mised me.

Title.
Maschilof Asaph] Or, A Plalm for Asaphto give instruction, Plal.

32. Tit. of A(aph) There is no certainty, neither concerning the author of Ajaph] There is no certainty, incluser comming the author of this Plalm, nor concerning the time, when it was composed, First for the author; it is not improbable that Asaph, who lived in Davidstime, a Prophet, and the author of some served hymns, Davids time, a Propiet, and the author of fome tiered hymns, as is recorded, a Chron. 29.30. was the author of fome of those Pfalms in this Book of Pfalms, that have this name prefixed: but the occasion of this, having been, as appears by it, some no-table profanation and devastation of the Temple, such as hapned many ages after in the time of the Babylonish Captivity; and fince that, once or twice; this Alaph, that lived in Davids time, could not be the author of it. That he should write prophetically fo long before, is the opinion of fome, I know; but grounded upon very little probability, as I conceive. They that hall reade it, and well confider of all particulars, will hardly believe that it is a prophetical ftyle. Others therefore, and those of ominent learning, have rather chosen to refer it to what we read I Sam. 4. of the taking of the Ark by the Philistines, It is likely that fo udicious a man could have faid more to make this opinio more plaufible, than it doth appear to me: but it is little, that h hath faid; of which fee more upon ver. 6. and hammers) and leado I finde in the History, to which he doth refer us, to perswad me, I should sooner believe what some others have conceited, that either it was another of that Name, who lived in those daes, when these things hapned; or that the author, however called, delivered it to some of Asaphs posterity, to be tuned and piblished; and so came to have that name prefixed. But all this very uncertain: neither doth it very much concern. It will more very uncertain: 1 neither doth it very much concern. It will more conduct to the right underfanding of the Plaim, to know the time, and particular occasion; but, that too, hath its distoultes, For if we refer it to Antiochus. 2s Junius, and Buert are opinion; he indeed did much profane the Temple, by idolarous facrifices, and by erecking his idols in the Sanctuary; but that he made fuch havoke of thefe magnificent fructures, according to the expressions of the Plaimit, importing little left than an absolute of the profession was read as exercised, bed didney to we read one and exercise the didney. folute destruction, we reade not ; and certainly, he did not. It is answered by some, first that these expressions may be intended not of the Temple, but of divers religious houles, called Syna-ogues, crefted in divers places of the land, for religious meta-ings: of which frequent mention is made in the New Teffament. I will eafily grant, that Synagogues by some of those expressions might be meant particularly or comprehended in the generality of the word "DUE: which though it be used of the Tabernacle particularly that stood in Moses his time, and of Solomons Temple afterwards : yet because it properly fignifies a iomons Temple atterwards: yet becaule it properly ignines a meeting; and then, as juxx noria in Greek, a Just of meeting; the may fitly be uffed of a Synagoue also, which is a Greek word almost of the fame fignification, as if we fail, a gathering test; that being the proper use of Synagoues, where people did meet, to pray, and to reade, and to exponded exhort, but to the control facilities, or to preform any other reliabilist fervices and the company of the property of the control not to factilice, or to perform any other religious services appointed by the Law, proper to the people onely. So "IVIO may probably be rendered ver.8. They have burnt all the synapsus of t probably be rendred ver.8. They have barn all the "ynaggers" God in the land; as it is therein the Englist: though tome, exhere, choole reacher to translate Tabernatis; by which they understand no other than the Temple, expeticle to burally, case cliwhere it is, and hash been noted before) because of the leveral rooms and divisions of it. But to leave that as a thing either than the summer to be about order. where way not improbable; yet that by will in the third veries, where feefeual deplations are mentioned: or by wild, or [2000] in the formal way to the formal when he was a feefer with the formal way to the way to Ferbeital deflations are mentioned: or by WTDD, or 12000 in the leventh; they have call free into by Sandbary; they have de-flief (by calling it down in the dwolling place of the Names to the ground; Synagogues the be intended; is altogether unlikely. Neither do thoic expensions, verife y, and e. fo well agree to Synagogues (of thoic expensions, verife y, and e. fo well agree to we reade not eliwhere) as to the Temple. Secondly therefore ir'is answered, that the Author, or Pfalmift, though the particular occasion were Antiochus his present persecution and procular occasion were Antonenis in spreem perceition and po-fination; yet upon that cecasion night efective former ful-ferings of the Temple by the Citaldeans in the Nelmchad-nerzam; which, if a min confider not onely how much time had palled between; but also that they were different Temples, that which was defloyed by the Chaldeans, and that which max when was nearoyed by the Constituents, and that when was profaned afterwards by Antiochus; and apply to this the tenor of the words all along, he will think no wayes credible. Thefe things confidered, three is more probability that that abfolute demolition and defruction of Solomons magnificent Temple by the Chaldeans should be deployed: neither is there any confiderable objection against it, but this, that where as Ezekiel, Jeremy, Daniel, (all noted Prophets) lived and pro-phefied in those times; it is said in the 9. verse, We fee not our figner, there is no mire any Prophet, &c. But if it be confidered how long those desolations lasted before the return of the Israelites out of Babylon; and the rebuilding of the Temple; it will easily be granted that those few named Prophets, did not fo constantly prophesie, but that there might be a long time of intermission: neither could their prophelying, when they did prophesse, supply the desect of those constant and ordinary Prophets (the word Prophet being of a very large notion and use) and facred Ministers, which should have administred comfort to the people, and taught them out of the Law, in their feveral habitations: which they flood fo much in need of in this their general calamity. This we take to be the most probable opinion: but we will not impose it upon any others, wherein we acknowledge our felves not yet fully fatisfied, rod] Or, tribe. V. 3. Lift up thy feet to perpetual defolations] The words in the Original, according to the best interpretors (some embracing the one; others, the other) will afford a double sense; either, Lift up thy feet, (firoles, or banners; any of these the Hebrew DODA will yield,) to perpetual desolations; that is, say some, to require thine enemies and ours, with eternal or final destruction. according to others, Lift with feet; (that is, make halte, to come and fee,) to perpanal defoliation; that is, those final and irreparable (by humane power) defructions and declations of the fearced Habitations, which the fury of our mercilese enemies hath wrought. This I take to be the more probable of the two. We often, according to the Scripture phrase, defire God to Lok up on, when we defire him to be merciful, to our affistance : and king Ezekia, though he knew God was not ignorant what Sennacheril king of Affyria, had written to him; yet he went up to the House of the Lord, faith the Text, and spread it before the Lord, 2 King. 19 14. The Letter was not more in the fight of God by it, than it was before; but Exekias made his faith and confidence in God by that aft, the more to appear to the world, which prevailed much with for fignes] In fign of victory over us and our Religion. V. s. A man was famous, according as he had lifted up] The word here may feem to imitate the nature of the thing that is spoken of Bere may teem to institute the nature of the thing may be an institute of the TDD line; translated thire; properly fignificant per legit; as it is here word for word expedied by fome. Intricacy is intended, that is certain, whether in wood, or work: and there is much intricacy in the words, which makes Interpreters much to dilier inthe! Expositions. Some faithle Grammarian would have made much of it, had be found the like in Homes, or Villa; But we will not be fourtious. If we can but make plain fenle of this per-will not be fourtiers. plexity, it will ferve our turn. Not therefore to take notice of every less difference, which would perplex the Reader perchance, more than fatisfie; the main is, whether the founders, or confounders, the builders or destroyers of the Temple, are intended by these words. The but, which the next verse begins with, being properly adversativa particula, hath moved many to conceive an antithelis between the two verses: which to make good, there being no doubt at all of the meaning of the next verse, they have pitched, in this, where the obscurity hath left a liberty for variety of conjectures, upon this sense: He that (heretosore) in the per-plexity of wood, or, in the thick wood (did cut down trees) with his ax, (for or towards the building of the Temple; must be unns ax, (tor for towards the building or the Lemple; must be underflood) was known (as famous; or, in as much reputation) as if he had offered unto the High (God) or, as if he had offered acrifices: or, offered (to God) on high; that is, in heaven.)

This is the femfe followed and profecuted by the chuefef Rabbins: by whom we are among other things, referred to Zach. 4.7. where indeed we finde somewhat that may seem not altogether imperti-nent; and he shall bring forth the head-stone thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it. Others thinking this to be too far fetcht, make this to be the fenfe; A m.m (among those merciles enemies) was famous, according he he did lift up bis axy, (or, for lifting up of bis ax) axis the had lifted it upon the third, trees; that is, He that carried himself in this business with most barbarousness, and cruelty, that had no more regard either to the holirounces and enterty, that had no more regard either to the holi-nic of the place, or the curricity of the work, than if he had been at work in the wood, felling down trees, or any thing elfe promificuoully? he had most credit, and was most applauded a-mong them. Or, as form others, according, as hedd hill in this as upon the menght and served my. (O, on fiddled gracene more) of the Temple. This I should easily grant to be the most likely sense that can be made of the words, if we could tell what to do with that Bur, of the next verse. In the Hebrew it is TIPUI, which properly fignifies And now: which is by fome thus made to cohere with the former words: This cruel barbarous enemy, after this utter destruction (what by fire, what with axes and hammers,) of the Temple, hath not yet done: his fury is not yet allwaged? but even now, he rakes into the ruines and rubbish of those glorious structures; and whatever he can finde, that is not yet wholly abolished, or defaced, he doth exercise his rage upon it : He is careful, that nothing should be preserved as a monument of that quondam so glorious, and so magnificent fabrick; the very ruines whereof, but for this their infatiable rage and malice, could not but have been precious. So Junius, and some

V. 6. But now they break down the carved work \ Hebrew 121 This is the reading in the Text : in the margine long ago by S. Jerome translated, Et nune, And now. Which I note the rather, because, fince that, some have made bold to tamper with the Hebrew, to bring it to the Vulgar Latine: herein much different from the Hebrew. So also mining, by the fame Jerome translated culaturas ejus, according to the proper fignification of it; some would have to fignific here, januas ejus; (the gates or doors,) but why I know not; except it be because of its affinity with ririo, which comes from the same radix, and signifies janua, a door. This difference is the more considerable, because should we grant janua to be the right meaning of the word, there would be ground for an argument, that the fufferings of the Temple, by Antiochus, should be the subject (of which fee more upon the title) of the Pfalm, forasmuch as the gates of lee more upon the title? of the Plain, toralimich as the gates of the Temple, though not any other part of it, at that time, were burnt by the faid Antiochus: as we reade in the Hilfory of the Maccabes, I Maca, 38.

and hammer! Heb. Theyphy Von Philiffina, (faith a learned dann here) admentalium tempus. His meaning is, that this word being as he deems it, of the Philiffine tongue, by others called, lingua Palastina, was here used of purpose, for an indication of the time; that is, that by that word it might be known in after ages when those things were done, and by whom, which are spoken of in this Pfalm, Now his opinion is, of which hath been spoken already upon the title of the Pfalm, that that taking of the Ark by the Philistines, related a Sam. 4. and what happened upon it, was it that gave occasion to all these complaints, title, I believe, and name of Afaph there prefixt, was his chiefest ground: of which fee more there. As for this word, I know no ground at al he had, to fay it was a Philistine word, except he first take it for granted, (which is the main controversie, and will not, I think, be casily granted by any, except his bare Authority perswade them) that the Philistines, not Chaldeans, or Grecians. or Romans, are they that are here spoken of. Rabbi Solomon makes the word to be an Arabick word, wherein he is followed by many. Junius makes it a Syriack word, both this and the former tion of his own opinion, that therefore Syriack words, and not Hebrew, are used, ad evidentionen temporis quo hee gesta sunt designationem. It seems neither of them are elsewhere to be found in the Scripture : which makes them to be suspected for strange words, But that, as I conceive, is but a weak argument. For there be many other of that kinde, not occurrent above once in the whole Bi-ble, which nevertheless are acknowledged to be Hebrew. And how can it be otherwise, but that as in all other writings, of no greater bulk especially, some words are found, but once used, by some one Author; which nevertheless in some other, are more from quent: fo it should be in the Bible too; which, were there any other ancient Authors written in the Hebrew tongue now extant befides the Bible, we might haply finde to be the case of these two words. Neither is it any argument that they are not Hebrew words, because now found in the Arabick, or Syriack : which two Languages, as all men know, are but Dialects of the Hebrew, and have preferved to us many Hebrew words, as by all learned in those tongues is acknowledged, which otherwise might altogether have perilhed. There is not any thing in the found, or pronunciation of either of these, as in divers other strange words that are found in the Scripture, which should give us occasion to suspect them ; and it is some argument that they should be Hebrew rather, because from them, as some learned Etymologists have judged, some Greek words, (as many others, yea most, that are old Greek words, out of the Hebrew, in general,) have been formed: as out of the last and most suspected, particularly,  and fome others. This may be answered concerning the Syriack or Arabick. But for the Philiftine, of which nothing now remains, why either of these words should be attributed to that Language, I know no ground at all. It is but a hare conceit, and needs no further answer, than a bare denyal. Some learned men are of opinion, that it was a mixt language out of the Hebrew and Egyptian: which they would ground upon S. Jeromes words, concerning the Canaanitifh Tongue. It is called in the Scripture, the speech of Ashbod, Nehem 13,24, but that doth not concern us here.

But if they have no better ground for their observation, I should not much regard it. For in those words, thy hand, and (or, even; as the ve may import as well) the right hand; it is much more probable that one and the same hand should be intended; and so the speech is more emphatical: thy hand, even thy right hand: a hand of power and terror, fuch as our present condition doth require. sangaome, nor from the fourh] Heb, from the wildernelle; and fo contains both north and fouth: for there was a wildernelle on both fides of Canaan, So Junius, and fome others, of this place: thereby endeavoring to prevent their cutiofity, who if either fosth, as it is here in the Text, and in divers other Translations: or north, as in others, (Vatablus,&c.) were particularly expedied, and one of the two, as by confequent it must, left out: to prevent their curiofty, I say, who would be ready to ask why in this specification of the parts or quarters of the world three being named, the fourth oneparts or quarters of the world three being named, the toutth one-ly floud be omitted; and if of purpole omitted, why promitine floudd not be thought by the Pialmint as well to come from the north, or fouth, (one of them being left or s, according to most Translations) as from either eigh, or well, 8c. Now the matter is answered, or rather the queftion prevented, if the defert, or the defert, or decidently the control of the chief for learning and judgement, is proposed but very enactely; artist, for learning and judgement, is proposed but very enactely a rather as the onition of others. That is over 1 because indeed without as the opinion of others, than their own : because indeed without example, and of it felf not fo probable. For though we read of a wildernels, 1 Kin, 19, 15, which flood on the north; yet is not that called the wilderness, absolutely, as that which flood on the fouth, is often but expedied by its proper name, the wilderness of Damaseus. (Quia neque ab Oriente, neque ab Occidente, neque a deferis montibus, quoniam Deus,&c.) where no promotion is mentioned, but help, or affiftance, or deliverance to be supplied: why defert mountains should be mentioned, some kind of reason is given by them that are set to maintain that Translation, be it never so falle, or rediculous; because, say they, people that come from barren desert places, are commonly (as using to live upon the rapine, because their own country will not maintain them) more fierce, and warlike, than those that live in better countries. This hath some shew of reason: but will not help us, who follow (and upon better grounds, I hope, though the Chaldee too go much that way :) a different, both fenfe, and tranflation. For my part, though for the fense in general, I differ nor from the reft: yet for the ground of the expression, (not less considerable than the sense it selse in this place:) I am of a far diffenucratic trian the letter in this place; j tail or a rar different opinion; which though I find nowhere elfe, yet I conceive grounded upon fo much probability, as that I shall not be afraid to propose it. I say then first of all that there be many secret allusions in the Scripture, in later books especially, to the books of Moses, the most ancient, and most known of all the Scripture; which if not obferved (as I believe they are not alwayes) must needs breed great obscurity. We observed one upon the former plalm verse 16. Thou hafte prepared : but that as probably onely, as is there shewed. But plal 19. 12. 13. Who can understand, &c. and, Keep back thy ser-want. - So shall I be innocent, &c. There is no question but that the Pfalmift in all that paffage doth allude to Numb. 15.27.30. which is so apparent, that most Expositors upon the place do refer thither in general : though when they come to the handling of particular words, as to tell us, why presumptuous fins, called the great trans greffon, &c. they feem to have forgotten their quotation: and feek for reasons and interpretations elsewhere, which that place onely, if it be granted that David doth allude unto it, doth afford. Now as concerning this place we are now upon, my opinion is, that the Plaimitt doth allude by these words (if he do not use some mon and proverbial speech among the Jews, grounded at first upon that Story: which I think as probable:) to the Story of Balak and Balaam, as recorded, Numb. ch 23, and ch. 24. Here first we have three places expressed from whence promotion should come. So there Balaam, expecting great promotion from Balak, in case he could please him by his propheses, Numb. 22 17, 37, and 24, 11, did three several times; 24, 10, and in three several places: (Ch. 23, 3, 14, and Ch. 24, 1.) apply himself, turning himself to several quarters of the Worlds to curse Israel, Whether he turned himself East, and West that was a Constant. lelf East, and West, the two first times, is not expressed in the Series ture: but onely that he flood upon a high place, the first time, Ch 33. 3. Upon the top of Mount Piga the second time, verse 14, the stuation of which places though we know, (as may be easily known of Mount Piga:) yet that will not help us, except it were expressed withall, how his face was turned. But that he stood East and West, may most probably be inferred by common tradition among the Jews, because it is directly said of the last or third place, that he did fet his face towards the wildernesses, (the very same word in the Original, 7207) which is here used by the Psalmist, though the Hebrews want nor variety of words to expresse a wildernesse :) Ch 24. first verse, And that very phrase of setting his face towards, hath an intimation of some request, or expectation of accomplishment, to come from that place, towards which the face is turned, and word Temple, And whereas it is said of Hezekiah. 2 King, 20, 2, that he turned his face to you towards (for it is the same word 18 in the Original:) the wall: the Chaldee Paraphraft, as I remember (for I have not the book at this time :) doth refer it to that custom That Balaams chief aim in removing from place to place, if by any means he could be inspired to his mind, was his own profit and promotion, besides what is thence to be learned, in the History: we have further confirmation from 2 Pet. 2. 15, the wages of unrighteoufness; and Jud, the rr, verse, for reward; besides Nehem 13, 2, bired Balaam, &c. Now when Balaam had tried fo many places, and fo many (as often as he changed place) feveral quarters and profpects of the skies, to fatisfie his ambition, highly inflamed by King Balak his goodly promifes; what was the iflue? The Story tells us: And Baaks anger was kindled against Balaam, &c. and faid, Therefore now fy thou to thy place: I thought to promote thee unto great honour; but I fee the LOR 1) hath kept thee back from honour, Numb. 24, 10,12. And was there not ground enough, think we, from all these particulars of this Story, to infer, and to make a proverb, or common speech (from fo remarkable, fo memorable a History) of it ; That promotion cometh neither from the East nor from the West nor from the wilderness folemnly delivered, as this is a it is not very probable, that David would contract himself by such an ambiguous expression, when he this be not plaine, I know not what is a meirher do I have the such as the su one objection that can be made against it. Yet I have taken the more pains to make it plain, because the filence of so many learned men that have written upon the falms, might make a man suspect, what otherwise would be undoubtable. I confesse I have them not all that have written upon the Plains: not fo many by far, as I had when these Annotations were first printed. Yet! have the chiefeft and generally best accounted of, now in fight : and in them I am fure I find no fuch thing fo much as mentioned. But if to be found any where elfe, I shall be so much the gladder, that the truth (the onely thing we should all aim at) may have so much more confirmation. Now if this be a right interp etation, which we have all this while laboured about; then it doth clearly follow, that either North, as fome, or South, as our English here, in the Text; with divers others ; instead of defert, as in the margin, or wildernesse; (which I like better of because it is the word used Numb, 24, first verse:) is a bad, that I fay not falle, translation, and doth much obscure the reference to the Story without which no good and fatisfactory reafon (as before faid and shewed) can be given, why the Pfalmist should use such a kind of speech. As for the matter of these words, it is more fully (more emphatically it cannot be) expressed t Chr. 29.11,12. by the fame David, (if David were the Author, as is most probable, though Afaphs name be to it :) Thine O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, &c. Poth riches and honour come of thee, --- to make great, and to groe frength unto all. Which neverthe-leffe is not fo generally, and absolutely to be taken, but that it is liable to divers exceptions, and reftrictions. The Mammon of unrighteoulnels, would not have so many servants, if he had not wherewith to reward them : nor fo many wicked men, come to highest places of power and preferment, did they not act by some or nigner places of power and Spirit of God. And though we do not believe, nay we know to be most falle, what the Devil did once arrogate to him-5,6. Yet it is not probable that by Christ himselfe he would have been silled the Prince of the world, John 12, 31. &c. or by his Apoftle, The god : 2 Cor. 4.4. had nor he great power given him in the things of this prefent world. It is enough for us to be certain, that he can do nothing, no, not in the meanest things, or against the meanest men of the world, without Gods permission, who doth restrain, and confine his power as Himselfe pleaseth, and makes his own purpofes to fland, and his promifes to take effect against all opposition of either men or devils, with as much (yea greater incomparably) facility, as the greatest and most absolute Monarch of the world can crush the meanest of his subjects, St. brysoftome doth often affirm, hat wicked men have not their wealth from God : which rightly understood, is true enough: nor repugnant to this place, But I must end this Note, V. 7. V. 8. For in the hand of the Lord there is a cup, &c.] A cup alone, is an ordinary fimilitude, for ordinary troubles and afflictions, Math. 20, 22, 23. Te shall drink of my cup, &c. to which purpose the art-cient Latins were wont to say, Ex codem poculo bibere; as is found in English observed) but the dregs thereof, &c., whereupon, they make this fenfe: That God, the supreme moderator, Hath appointed troitbles, more or leffe and afflictions to all men, both good and bad; in this world : but that he dealeth them in a certain measure and proportion: that is, to his people, out of his fatherly care over them, afflictions fo moderated and limited, that they shall not be overcome by them, but overcome them to their own further good, overcome by them, but overcome them to their own further good, and to his glory; if his to be intended by the fift part of the fimilitude; it is full of micrure: and he pure hour of the fame; but, to the wicked and goddlefe, corrower and vexations without flire or measure; terrible judgements; ending in despair and utter defluction; this to be intended, by the drege of his cap, or wine: wring out and drawle, by all the wicked of the earth. The fense is plaufible. But if we compare with other like places, where this fimilitude is used, there will appear no such difference; but that all promiseuously, whether they be Gods people, (in outward profession at least) or others, are said to drink of the same cup, and mixture : not as is here conceived, the one to drink the wine ; and the other, the dregs. So Ifai, 51, 17. Awake, awake, fland up, O Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury; Jesulatem, which half a simil, at the hand of the Lord the cut of 10 Hz 1017, the half all miles and similar the half of the Lord the cut of 10 Hz 1017, the half all miles and wrong them 0.3. So Exck, 2.3. 3. Thus flatt drink of the filters cut, deep and larger, 8.c., it is blook on to Judah.) the cut of affinitionen and definites, 8.c. Thus flatt even drink it, and fack, it out: the word is 1 1190; the fame as is the translated to wring out. (1011 1201 1201 Hz wring them out, and drink them). See also Jerem. 3.5. 15, 17, 8.c. and Revel. 14. 10 So that this mention of dregs here, if interpreted by these places, is rather, by way of aggravation, to set out the greatnesse of either Gols anger, or judgement, than by way of antithesis, as is conceived. And so indeed is this place expounded by Pial. 1xxvi.

And so we find the word uspatowodas ufed Revel, 14. 10, the fame fhall drink of the wine of the wrath of God which is poured out without mixture? The wine of the wrath ov. The words, if translated word for word, ge xexegaquire axeasov. Inc words, it ranuacte word for word, would imply a contradiction, mixed without mixture; but, the meaning is, as it is well experied by the English, powed out: and that swibout mixture, there, is but an interpretation of what is here termed, red wine: and so indeed it is here too in the translation of the Septuagint. (mornigtor er X eigi xuşlau bivou a'ngalle) So that here coo, would be the same contradiction, if this mixine were taken in the proper fignification. They therefore that have confured this inene proper influencement, any increase that may exhibite this in-terpretation, a dilute interpretation, may recal their jeft, and ac-knowledge their errour.

I will remember the years of the right hand of the most High.] The ambiguity of the word MINO which may be translated either years as it is here; or mutationes; that is, changes, as by divers; hath occasioned much variety both of Translations, and Expositions. If, years, the most probable sense will be (which he further prosecutes in the following verses) that to his present infirmity, and doubts, he hath opposed the consideration of former times, when God did use his right hand; that is, did shew his wonderful power either in particular deliverances afforded to himself in his necessity; or publick, to his people in general in their extremities, when opprefed by their enemies, and the like. So Pfal. 74. after a long complaint of their present condition, ver. 12. 13. &c. he remembers, and relates what God had formerly done for them; For God is my King, &c. V. 49. He cash upon them the servenesse of his anger, weath and insideration. Some, because of the ten plagues of Egypt, they finde but seven here mentioned, think the rest, three in number, to wis, that of the lice, which in that order Moles relates them was the third, Exod. 8, 16. &c. that of boiles and blaines the fixth, Exod. . 8. third, Exodis, 16, 8C, that of points and planes in HKII, Exod, 9, 8, 8C, and laftly, that of the darknelle in all the land, the ninth, Exod, 10,11,8C, might be comprehended by these many general words here heaped together, But then weshall be as much troubled to give reason why the rest, (the greater number, seven of ten) being particularly mentioned and expressed, these three should be thus put ogether, and that in such general terms, as may comprehend any of the rest, or all of them, as well as these. And then secondly, if three plagues were intended, just lo many; why the words exceed that number; being four at least; ferceness of anger, wrath, indignation, and trouble; which hath moved the author of this conceit, contrary to what himfelf had before fet down, of three onely omitted, or not expressed particularly; here to find four; to wit, the fit also, the mmrain of cattel: of which there, indeed, some make a doubt, whether particular mention be made of it, or no : as may appear by the dif-ferent translation of those words, (for there it must be, or nowhere) of the fiftieth verie; but gave their life over to the peftilence; in the text; but gave their beafts to the murrain, in the margin. Then again, supposing we could farisfic concerning the number; another question by some other may haply be raised about the order, why the Pfalmist doth not observe the same order that Moses doth: that being the fecond here, which in Mofes is the fourth; and that third here, which in him is fecond; and that fourth here, which in Mofes makes the eight; that fift, which in Moles, the feventh ; and laftly, that fift here, which there the fixt. Our best answer therefore will be, if any frick at the omiffion of either three, or four, of the ten, to defire an answer from them, whether it was not free for the Pfalmist to mention as many, or as few, as he thought fit himself, without any further regard than to his own phanfie, and his pen, or verse ? Or if he had not mentioned any at all, whether he could have been justly charged of any omission ? If that cannot be showed, as I believe it cannot; then is it against reason, to require a reason why all not expressed, as well as some. And so we shall conclude, that these words (the words of this verse) be general words, which relate to all the plagues in general, and not to any particularly. See also upon plal. 105, 28. He fent darkneffe, &c.

Others, good Angels, called evil Angels, whilest under God, minifers of evil, or executioners of Gods just fugge-ments. There be examples of both god and evil, ufed by God in these cases. But that those were evil angel; that were used by God in that businesse, here mentioned, some think is intimated by Moses, in the word THTOW the destroyer, Exod. 12, 13. But that can be no argument, fince the Angel whom God used about the three dayes pestilence, described, 2 Sam. 24. in the same Chapter and verse is stilled ITTIND the destroyer; and yet the Angel of the Lord : which is not likely to be meant of Sat in who indeed had been by his tempting of David, (as we read, 1 Chron, 21. 1.) the occasion

So, fire, bail, famine and death Eccl., 39, 18, 29, are termed finite, created by God for vengence; and in the New Tellament too, the word is lometimes; if I be not mittaken, uted in that notion. For if I be nor mistaken, the intention of the Plalmift here, was to charactarile a good King, by two excel-lent properties, which indeed comprehend almost all that can be aid to the commendation of an absolute Prince. The first is, goodneffe; not counterfeit, or ascititious; but natural and sincere t exame, in Greek, which comprehends justice, clemency, and many other vortues. But goodnesse though always commendable of it felf, whatever it be; yet goodnesse without valour in a King, is but a lame commendation, and may probably make (there be examples enough to be found) an unfortunate both King and people. I con-ceive that valour is included in the word hana; the usual emblime of action and power. But again, because valour, without prudence and discretion, doth more hurt oftentimes, than good; as valour is added to goodnesse, so prudence to valour: but not as a distinct vertue from it, because in very deed (as Philosophers also teach) valour, without discretion, doth not deserve the name of valour, and may more properly be called rathnelle, madnelle, desperatnelle, or any thing, than valous. And we know that David is set out in the Scriptures, not as a good and pious Prince onely, but also valiant : a mighty valiant man, and a man of war, I Sam. 16. 18. By those two properties also doth Homer, the Poet of Poets, charathatile a good King m. Barthaf rayada narago taliyunnit which hath been accounted in after ages a compleat Elogium of most exemplary Princess flowever is this seem to relish of too much fubrilty, which I professe I'doste to avoid in such a work as this; 1 shall content my felf with most Interpreters, by prudence of hands, to understand, prudent, discreet administration, and discreet carriage of all manner of businesses. of Asaph] Or, for Asaph.

Verse 1. Thou that leadest Joseph like a flock By Joseph, most understand the Tribe of Ephraim, the lon of Joseph; which was the head of the ten Tribes , separated from Judah : so that the calamities of the ten Tribes apart by the Chaldeans, are that the calamities of the ten Fribes spart by the Chaldeans, age-conceived to be the subject of this Psalm. So Amos 6. 1. &c. Ju-dah is reproved, because not sensible of the afflictions of Joseph, ver. 6. that is, of the ten Tribes, carried into captivity about 150. years before the taking of Ierusalem, by the same Chaldeans, Others, because mention is made of the Ark, (herween the Cheru-bims) where God was said to dwell (of which see Exad. 23. 22. And there I will meet thee, &c) and that the ten Tribes were departed from the worship of the true God, that was said to dwell there, and Ark, or in the God of the Ark; they therefore conceive that the ten Tribes cannot here be meant particularly, but by byfsph, they method defined all the Tribes in generall, as Plalm next, verle 5. This be ardefined in Tyleph for a refinment, &c., But the objection is in very thoic that know thee ast, nor call upon thee? But whether we take died of little confequence. For if the Plalmift may be allowed to addresse himself to the true God, for them that had forsaken him; why not as well to the God dwelling in the Ark, or among the wny nor as went to the God awering in the First, or among the Cherubins of the Arks being an ordinary periphalis, or expression of the true God in the 'cripture'? besides, as is well answered by some, though the generality of the ten Tribes had for laken God, the Charles of the Charles had been as the control of the Charles of the Charles had been controlled the Charles of the C ome, thought the generally yet many there were of that division, who not only had for laken them locally, 2 Chr. 11. 16, 17, but also remaining among them, worshipped the true God in their hearts; nor did conform to the outward Idolatrous worship of the rest, I King. 19. 18. Tet I have lest me seven thousand in Israel, &c. A greater objection may b; as I conceive, though no notice be taken of it, from the next words. as we shall fee there.

V. 2. Before Ephraim, and Benjamin, and Manaffeh , flirre up the frength | Why these Tribes should be joyned, and why these only mentioned is a question; and whether all the Tribes in generall; (of which fee what hath been already faid upon the first verse) and Pfal. 68. 27. the Princes of Judah) or the ten only, be intended, They that would have all the Tribes included, fay, that it is usuall in the Scripture, by naming of some, to understand all, that the in the Scripture, by naming of ionne, to undertrand all, that the Tribe of Ephraim and Manafle, before the Kingdomes were fetled in the Tribe of Judah, were the chiefeft Tribes, being Josephs pofterity: that these three Tribes, when all the Israelites, divided into four equall parts, encamped about the Ark, made one part, Numb. 2.17, 18, &c. and with reference to that ancient relation, though long after, might probably be named together. And be-fides that benjamin had a patticular relation to the Tribe of Ephraim and Manafle, because Benjamin and Joseph were not only brethren, as all the reft of the Patriarchs; all fons of Jacobs but alfo dusumt en, as St. Bafil here calls them, fons of one mother. This, upon a supposition that the twelve Tribes in general are the subject of these complaints But that by some others, men of great judgement and learning, will not be granted; that all should be intended, and yet neither Judah, the very chief (in those dayes) or all the Tribes; nor the Temple, or City, far more confiderable to the Jews in all their joyes or forrows, than life, or any thing elfe, should be mentioned. But they that object to ftrongly, and in my judgement plaufibly enough, against the for-mer, take no notice at all, (which I much wonder at) of one strong objection that may be made against their opinion. For if the ten Tribes: onely, or the Israelites, as then called, were thre concerned; how comes Benjamin to be named; which was a diffinct Tribe from the Ifraelites, and adhered unto Juda, when that un-Into tront the literatures, and annered unto Jada, when this unhappy division, by the revolt of ten Tribes, happened? As for the first, it is no where extant but in this place: the Rab bines can tell us nothing of it, of certainty, and all that either by mology; as it is conceived to be a derivative of [13, which fignifieth aptare, firmare, disponere, &c. or upon the context here , being thus joyned with the verb DOJ , which fignifies to plant. Upon the the first ground, some translate it, a base, or prop, or step: such as are used about vines, to bear the branches, and sometimes the body: and upon the second, others, a vine; as here: or, a plant. But there be, who think that I is here instead of 1: and thereupon render hortam, that is, a garden. Some think it to be an Egyp gian word: but I fee little ground for it, except all words, but once to be found in the Scripture, and must be concluded to be firange words. However, if Egyptian, yet so it would, as they in-terpret it, signisic a plant. No that all this variety comes to one effect, and makes no confiderable difference of fense. As for the other word 73, I know not why there should be any difference about it. It is true, the ordinary fignification of it is, a fon: but it is as undoubtedly true, that it fignifies sometimes a bough, or branch, as a unaconoccut rue, tract in ignines ionicimes a ouigh, or orange, as Gen. 49, 22. cwice in one verleg 5 fleph in 4 in tight lower, beckee befides 7 1132 the fermione of it, properly daughters, there also translated branches: which fignification being very proper and natural here, why any should rather choose the former; because more ordinary, and thereupon tell us, that Christ is meant; or, as some others; that Solomon; I see no cause.

Pfal. 39, 11. V. 17. Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand] By the man of thy right hand, most understand, the man of thy love, as Benjamin (properly, a fon of the right hand) was to Jacob. And by hand, point (property), a jon in the right hand, was to factor, and the manuferthanding power and protection, is as ufuall. See upon Pial. 74. 16. thou half prepared!) they make this to to be the meaning Proceed and detend the man of thy right hand, that is, fay fome, that wine that branch, which that been fo dear unto thee; upon which thou half beflowed for much coft; taking the word man. not, which thou hat before a binuch coit; taking the word main. not, approperly, perforally but as they call it reall; referring to the particular thing, spoken of before, whether man, or whatever elle it be. To this propole chey bring, the man of hunger; so ca lungey; and a manof thiding, for the object of chiding; a man of prace, to a warter, and the like. Whereim neverthelde there is a manife. difference : because man in these phrases , though not principally intended to fignifie a perion; yet it refers to a particular man, not any thing elfe; and therefore may be called perfonall : whereas here any thing etter, and therefore they be dated per primar writers including its (as they expound) otherwise; referring immediately to a vine, and in that vine, metaphorically, to a whole Nation, Other therefore by the man, underfland the King of the lifacilies, whoever he was that had right to that kingdom, in those calamitous the new was that had right to that kingdom, in those calamitons times. But they are put to it, to give a reason, why the Psalmish should pray, not onely for an Idolatrous wicked King, but for an usurper, whose predecessors had impiously revolted from their lawfull King, the King of Judah. So that after they have faid as much as they can to that purpose, they come about again, and would rather have the whole Church understood, And by the fon would rather have the whole chulch the har none might be ex-diman, the more ordinary for of people, that none might be ex-cluded from the benefit of thefe prayers. Others finding but little probability in this exposition, would have the Mesias intended, either in both places; or at least, Christ in the first, the man of Gods right hand; and the Church in the last, by the fon of man. The Chaldee Paraphrast referreth it either to David personally, which is not folikely; or to some, whether Messias or other, that had interest in the promifes, made by God unto David. For he translates, as Genebrard expresses him, Sit manus tua super virum, cui juralti in manus dxtra tua: that is, Let thy hand be upon the man to whem theu hast sween by thy right hand. Wherein I make no question, but he had a respect to Plal 89.35. Once have I sworne by my holinesse, that I will not be unto David, and Plal, 132, 11. That hath sworne in truth unto David, &c. reflary: but if any fuch; more probale, that by the wild boare, as torily to conclude, that if the Plaimit his intention was that way, as to recommend any unto God by these words the surest way of exposition must be grounded upon these words concerning Daof expolition must be grounded upon these words concerning us-vial in the lame Plann, I have tail dely apon on that is maply to. I have found David my forwart, &c. With whom my hand shall be esta-hibled; min earn ally flush lift griben him: "excel 19, 30, 31, 50 and both the man of thy right hand, and the fun of man, be under shoot of fine one, not divers but the same, whether man or peop, that were conceived to have interest in these expectsions and pro-ductions." was so much concerned (as all men are in theirs) in his posterity, and that Gods promifes to him were most concerning his ifue, and the stability, and perpetuity of his people and kingdom after him the Plalmist night very well, in desiring God, in that sense, to strengthen David; (as surviving in his posterity, though deceafed himself personally, many ages before) intend any, whether king or people, that had relation unto David, either of people or progeny : and so David the immediate object of the words, and yet in geny; and 10 Davia tree influenate object or the words, and yet, in lim, either the ten Tribes, or all the twelve in generall. Had it not been for these words, which gave me so much light, to which I was happily guided by the Chassee Parapharas, I must confesse I have found so little faits action otherwise from any Expostrors, that I should have been bold to have ventured upon another exposition, quite different from any of thele; but not leffe literall, or proper to the words, as a conceive Wicked men, we know, whom God doth imploy to execute his just jdugements, are called the sword, and the hand of God; as Pfal. 17. 13. 14. From wicked men , which are thy fword: From men which are thy hand, O Lord, from men of the world, &c. And how God doth use to strengthen such, Isaiah declares at large, Therefore their habitations were of small power: they were dif-mayed and confounded, &c. 37. 17. And the Prophet Habakkak faith, that God hath ordained and established (or strengthned as the word may import) such, for correction 1.12. And as for Gods right hand, though commonly mentioned against the wicked in the defence of Gods people; yet is that also sometimes turned (and so mentioned) against Gods own people too; as Lam 2.3,4 He hath drawn back his right hand from before the enemies, &c. He hath bent his bow, he from with his right hand as an adversary, &c. So that instead of a prayer, I should have made an imprecation of these words But I rather adhere to the former interpretation, as more agreeable to the fenfo of other Expositors: but especially to the 15. verse, where some of these words are used, and would not probably (though sometimes by a figure called antanaelasis, it be so:) be repeated here so soon after, but to the same purpose, Some surrher confirmation we have alio from Efay his words : Fear thou not , for I am with thee : (the words are directed to the Church in general, not to any particular man) be not difinated, for I am thy God. I will frengthen thees yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteon Ineffe, 14.20 | must not omit, that some have thought Zerobabel might be the particular man (if any particular) intended by thele words : which if we could grant the twelve Tribes in general, to be the subject of these complaints, (which we cannot well, as we said before) we should not altogether dislike. There he some things in the Prophets, as Haggai, and Zechariah, spoken of him, things in the Propiets, as Hagga, and Zechariah, Joben of him, hat would five very well to this purpole. All Expositors seem to agree upon it unani-monfly, that David wrote it in some one of his flights and persecutions, whether by Saul, or Absalom, when he had not free accesse to either Ark or Tabernacle; and was deprived of the benefit of holy affemblies and folemnities: after which, how carneftly he was wont to long, we have elsewhere shewed, as upon the 2, verse hath already been noted. See the reference there. Upon this supposition, concerning the whole, this will be the meaning here: David in his wonted zeal doth bemoan himfelf, and in a poetical firain (as fond and paffionate lovers are wont to catch at any find occa-fion) doth exposulate and complain, that his condition should be worle than that of Birds, who had less to do with the house of God than he, and yet had free accesse unto it, who was denied him, This is the common Exposition, and may still be, for me; I find no This is the common exponent, and may not use, to me; and no loch inconveniency in it, that should make me to oppose this general consent. Yet mine opinion is somewhat different; to wit, that no Davids absence, but their distance, who lived in the remote parts Davia appends one then ditance, who free in the temote parts of the land, and were wont, according to the Law, Emod. 3, 17, thrice every year (befides what they might do of their own accord) through some deferts and widernelles, and many other difficulties, through some description by methods, and many sometimes, in many companies together, to repair to the fet-feafts and folemnities in Jerufalem; that thefe, I fay, are the proper subject of this process. Pfalm, or Song : written (as I conceive) in their behalf, to be used or fung by them upon the way, for their comfort and endourage-ment. That most part of the Psalm rends to that purpose, or at least, fits very well, may appear by the most approved Expositions of hts very weil, may appear by the most approved a spontanton greatest part of it: why all should not, I fee no reason at all 1 to the contrary. Now upon this supposition, I should shy that either Birds are mentioned, as examples of fluidous and fedulatous creatures, which to compass their ends, that is, to provide themselves of a convenient place, both of reft and fafety to themselves or a convenient place, both of reft and fafety to themselves and their young ones, spare no labour, but seek far and near, till they have speed, whether in private or public k houses, a particularly, the reft is the consideration of these might serve for a poetical (for that must still be taken into consideration)encouragement, unto these weary Travelless, to put them in mind, that since all their westare, both spiritual and temporal, and all their security, depended on their relation to that houle, and their interest in, and to those solemnities, they should not think much of their paines. If any objection can be against this Exposition, it must be from the words, ver, 9, 10: where David seems to pray for himself: of which more shall be faid there. But a greater objection against the com-mon opinion we shall find in the 7. verile. However, do not peremptorily determine: I do but propose, as a thing that may be fur-ther considered of. cause of the evennesse of the roof. They tell us of high placer, and wisten this Plain, when persecuted by either Saultor his own Son more, then every ordinary hill. The perfecution by his Son, was fo foon ended, that it stands with little probability that David should so complain for that time of absence; making no mention at all (which is well observed by some) in all this Plalm, (which in other Pfalms, when he complains of his absence forced by the vio-lence of persecution, he doth: as Pfal. 42. & 63.) of any suffering in any other kind at that time, when (upon that supposition) in so much danger of losing both crown and life at one time. This hath made fome very judicious Expositors to forfake the common opinion, of Davids writing of this in exile, and time of persecution: nion, of Davids writing of this in early, and time or perfection; and to think his ablence, (that allo forced, in fome fent; and much against his will) in the profecution of his wars, when hinsielf was preferr in perfon, to be the more probable both time, and occasion of it. This I should far somer believe, than what is commonly be lieved by others about it, But what I think most probable, I have neven by others about it, but what I think more probable, I have already delivered upon the third verle, year the farrow, &c.

V. 9. and look upon the face of thine anointed I that a King, either David, or fome other, is intended by that expression, is the opinion of most; and to me too, seems most likely, Though there be dif-ferent interpretations too, if I would make use of them against my own judgement. The Chaddee Paraphrast understands it of the Melsias, that was expected; and so most Rabbins after him. Now Melsias, that was expected and to holi Radoms and him. Now that thee holy travellers should be appointed in their way, and folemin form of praying, to remember their King, I think no man will think strange. But then it follows in the next verie, for a day, in thy courss, &cc. I had rather be a door-beeper, &cc. which being added as a reason of the former prayer, will not make good coherence, except we conceive the prayer, and look upon the face, &c, to be uttered by David for himself in his own person. For therefore he prayes that God would be gracious unto him, and speedily deliver him from this banithment, and the fad confequence of it, his absence from Gods house; because such an opinion he hath of it, that, &c. If therefore David spake this of himself, and in his own person, this may seem suconsistent with our apprehensions concerning the subject of the Plaim, declared before upon the third verse

I did foresee this before, as I mention it here, and yet did not think I did toretee this betore, as a mention it next, and yet an inciting it a fufficient ground to make me change my opinion. Fifth, because I do not think it altogether impossible, that David, though he intended it especially for the use of others, yet in penning of the Plalm, night infert formewhat in his own person. And as for the confequence, it may be very good, without any relation to any flush force abdrince, if David pray that God will lookupan his face, or blefle him, because of his extraordinary love and affection (bef. known unto God himfelf) to his house and service, It may be all Kings that have loved the house of God, as David did, have not fped fo well as David, in point of temporal rewards, All times are nor alike. There is somewhat else that God hath in ftore for them that love him-befides temporal rewards, or elfe Dayd himfelf, I believe, did mile of that, which he chiefly expected. However, has confequence will be made good by David himfelfe, the beft Interpreter of himfelf, Pfal. 132. 1,2 &c, Lord remember David, and all his affillions: How he sware unto the Lord, and owned unto the might Good of Jacob, Surely I will not come, &c. untill I find out a place for one of pinco, one of a win not come, occ. until a pinc out a place por the Lord, an indication for the mighty Out of Jacob. They must come down from heaven, before they be found among men and the entertaining of those on earth, secures the passage, and

Mercy and truth 1 have already fet down what I think most probable. But because it is an obscure place, as may appear by the va-riety of expositions to give the better context to the Reader, I shall mention some other interpretations. Of truth, joyned with mercy, and spoken of God, now to be understood; see upon Psalm 57. ver, 10, For thy mercy is great, &c. Truth, fo taken here, of God, &c as it may imply the performance and accomplishment of any promife made by God to his people, in general; so more particular-ly, the performance of that which for the consequence and excellency, we may call the accomplishment of all promises; (and so experfed by the faithfull Jews, and then especially most thought upon by them, when in great trouble and calamities) to wir, the comming of the promifed Messiah, or Deliverer. This sense is sollowed by some of good credit and authority, There be, who re-ferre the words to Christ and his Gospel; but in another sense materre ine words to christ and us Sosper; out in another tente ma-king mercy, and timb; righteoufness, and peace: to answer one another, antitheeally, as they call it. They would have trait, to relate to mercy; if the truth, that is faith, (for so the word significant too.) of man, or in man, as fome: as either, truth; that is, integrity of life, &c, to answer to mercy in God: as the cause, and the effect. (but in severall respects as we take truth for, either faith, or integrity :) inseparable. And so peace in man, to answer to the ju fice in God : not to be understood of his ordinary justice, but of tha juffice of God, by which we are justified. This interpretation, I be-lieve, came from Junius, in his Notes upon the Bible; but is largey profecuted by Genebrard, the Papist; who quotes Rabbines for it though Christ I believe he might have quoted some body elfe, more pertinently and truly. Calvin quores St. Augiffine much to the fame purpole: and is well pleased with the matter it felf, as ve-ry found and usefull, but not to serve here, as the proper meaning: which is my opinion too. Truth shall spring out of the earth, and righteeyings shall look down from heaven! Here is ground enough for any man to exercise his wit, to devile differences between truth, and righteeyings, as here opposed; and why the one should be said to spring out of the earth, and the other assigned to heaven; truth for faith, in men, upon earth: justice, as before explained, by which we are justified, (called by St. Paul, the juffice of God,) in heaven, or from heaven, &c. Many such speculations may arise from these word, if a man shall precitely flick to the letters and fyllables. But take them, as with lome of the best Interpreters I think they should be taken, proverbially, then the meaning is, that heaven and earth shall be full of both, both of truth and righteouinefic; an emphatical expression truth, there is but one God; as the Apollie teacheth, 1 Cor. 8. 5 6. of great abundance.

and of different notions. When it is attributed to it, God imports a tenderness of affection in God, towards all his creatures in generall. out especially toward them that have more particular relation unto him, by mutual covenants and engagements, whether general, or particular, of faithful obedience, and religious worship, on the one fide; of love, favour and prorection, on the other. Such a general covenant was the Law, which extended to all the Jewes: and the covenant with Abraham, in which all the Jewes, or Ifraelites had equall interest. Of a more particular covenant, though we might find divers other examples, yet shall not need to feek further then David himself, that of all others in that kind, being the most expresse, and most considerable. So, God דוסרון (alwayes actively) that is, mercifull and gracious; and man אחסור, sometimes active ly, that is, meek loving, chavitable towards men; as affecting conformity with God, to the utmost of humane ability; and pious, religious, holy towards God, in all religious duties and actions and lometimes passively, in the bare confideration of his nearer relation, and more particular interest in Gods favour; as if you should say, Gods savoured or beloved Saint, or servant. V. 10. Wilt thou fiew wonders to the dead ?] The Pfalmift take it for granted, that as it is proper unto God to do winder: (among which of all kind. frange deliverances in greatest extremities, none of the lest:) so it is very fit, that God should be praised and glorified for those wonders that he doth, so that in effect all that he aims at by these three verses, is but this, to fay, that God, if he make no hafte to his fuccour, before it be too late, he will bereave himself of no small store of thanks and praises. in suffering him to perish who was so fully purposed to magnific him to the utmost of his ability for his deliverance. But this must be supposed to be spoken of God and to God, by that ordinary a v Seanona Sea, without which men, astong as men, can scarce speak, or be spoken unto ; and therefore ordinarily used by God himself, when he speaketh unto men. V. 47. Remember how fhort thy thine h.] The fame Author, against whole censure we excepted upon Plal. 88, 10. Wilt thou show. wonders to the dead : (a place very like unto this:) meets us here again with the same censure in substance of matter, though in different words. And he goes, here too, upon the fame ground, bethe immortality of the foul, and another world after this. What I have faid there in defence, may serve here. Neither is that objection much more confiderable, as I conceive, that the Pfalmift feemeth to prescribe God a time, because he present to earnestly for a speedy deliverance. Of such earnestnesse, see upon Plalm 70. 1. Make haste to helpe me: and verse 5. Make haste units nie, O Grd. But there is more in these words, to be excepted against (though it is not, that I finde,) and in my judgement, not for charge God, that be hath made all men (or created, as it is in the Original,) vaine ? that is, in effect milerable. Indeed the vanity of man in this kind, even of the greatest and wealthiest of men, is so conspicuous, that wifest heathens have not onely acknowledged it, and by reasons, and several instances at large de-monstrated it: but also professed themselves not a little posed monitared it. how it should come to passe, that he for whom all other things seem to have been made, and through the advantage of reason, of necrest assinity to God; should of all creatures, if all things well confidered, be the most wretched and miserable. No wonder, that they should wonder, who knew nothing (or if any thing, but very obscurely) either of Adams sinne, or Gods curse upon it. But how shall we excuse any man, that hath curle upon it. But how hall we exeute any man, thas hath hown the Story of the creation, for so speaking; not of God onely; but even to God himsels? The Story indeed of mans recation doth not tell us plainly, that Adam was created immortal: neither is any man bound precisely so to believe. By this natural constitution, being sight and blood, he was capable of death: his body compounded of several elements, was siable to diffolution, or refolution of thefe elements, into their able to diffolition, or refolition of their elements, into their first condition; but by cating of the tree of life, plantied in Paradile for that purpole, and by a particular providence of odo, he fitionli have lived in a constant temper of all hunfours, not liable to any decay, or defects of nature: and after a plexic of time appointed by God, from a terrefital and temperary Paradile, ranslated withbout death, bits on a cuernal and heaven-by. This had be but by construing the limit of the construint of the providence of the construint of the construint of the providence of the construint of the co 19. This had been hit; and this the happinetic of all that had come from him, had he continued in his innocency. But of Adms eftare in Paradile, and what was intended by God about him, and his pofterity, if they had not lapfed, there be many queftions among the Learned! we bind no man to believe any thing, in the businesse, more than is cleerly revealed by the word of God. This is clear and undoubtable, that death entred into or God. In 18 18 cere and undoudrate; that weath entre into the world by fin, Rom, 5, 12, and 6, 23, and with death; all other milery, forrow, ficknelle, penury, ftrife, and the like, They were no leffe than anathematized by the ancient Ch rch, who ever maintained that Adam flould have died, although he had erer mantained that Adam inouth alvee deed, atthough he have fitted, agricultyle diet. That this is spoken by thin through paffpoun whenemita: and delarit intemperer: and wirelege-ceft, 2 as found here, though upon another occasion? Or if that be too ruff, and rash, concerning fuch holy men, and fuch as we conceive to have been inspired: may we say then, that God, in some sense, though remote', and improper; may be faid to have created man to vanly, because he created him mutable, and less him to the liberry of his own will: liable to the temptation of the Devil, who indeed was the immediate inftrumental cause of all the evil that hath happed unto man. This God, it is true, might have prevented, had he been pleased, and had it been best so; many wayes: which because he did not , according to the rules and maximes of men (to which nevertheleffe we know God is not tied : neither is it the fame reason :) he may be faid in some sense; to have been the cause: by them espe cially, who groaning under the burden of some great calamity, speak it rather to exaggerate their own present misery, as thinking they have just cause to wish they had never been borne, or created; in general: than to contest with God, positively and dogmatically, that they were created so and so, or to charge Him with any kind of unjustice, or want of goodness.

by, that as yet none hath been found very fatisfactory. By some that are most exact, I finde these three, among many, accounted chiese. Some therefore translate first, Who knoweth, &c. & fecundum timorem tui, iram tuam? that is, say they, Who is so sen-fible of thy wrath, as to sear thee as thou oughtest to be seared? Secondly, according to thy fear, so is thy wrath: that is, say some, They feel the effects of thy wrath most, that most fear and serve thee. For judgement beginneth at the house of God, 1 Pet, 4-17. and, whom God loveth, be chastifeth, Heb. 12.6. Thirdly, others, They onely are lenfible of thy wrath, (to observe it, that is, and to make a right use of it) who religiously fear thee. Others, either they take no notice of it; afcribing all their croffes to chance, or deftiny: the Stars and Constellations, &c. Or, haply, if they do, it is to fret and murmur; or to curfe and blafpheme; but not to humble themselves and submit. These I find reckoned as the chiefeft. And if any can content himself with any of these, I am not against it. I could object somewhat against every one: but instead of that, I will briefly fet down what I my felf think is the true meaning. Wicked men in all ages, (and that fuch have been of old among the Hebrews, we know by their fects) that have laboured to promote Athicim, perswading men that either there is no God at all; or if a God, yet fuch a one, as doth not intermeddle with at art of the dodg yet tell not all as a may appear by the writings of ancient Philosophers, Epicurcans and others) hath been one of the chiefest, that God being a simple Spirit, is not liable to any passions, or affections; and therefore cannot be angry. Upon this they inferred, that the fear of God was a groundlesse thing: a meer bug-bear, to keep fools or children in awe. I could flew what ufe fome reputed Christians have made, and make to this day of this argument, to overthrow some fundamentals of our Christian faith. But I will not digreffe fo far, Onely, because we would not have fuch an argument go without any answer at all, I will make use of the words of an ancient Heathen (whether his meaning were as right as his words, I will not enquire; it doth not fo much concern us) upon this very occasion : in answer to an objection that was made concerning perjury, that fince it was certainly known (that is the objection) that the gods could not be angry, men need not, especially upon such an extraordinary occasion, as to save a life or so, stand so much upon breach of an oath; Quod affirmate, saith he, quist deep prasente promiseris, in termindum of ad fiden pertinet. So say we, God properly cannot be angry; we grant; but he is just and true. Either we must not speak of God at all, or we must speak of him in termes taken from the similitude at all, or we must peak or num in termine taken run the minimum of man. The wrath of man, what, and how it ufter to work, we know: The wrath, for fear; he ufter both words) of a King, (laith Solomon,) is as the rearing of a Lion. Wholo provoketh him to anger, sinneth against his own foul, Prov. 19, 12. & 20, 2, When therefore we ascribe wrath, or fury unto God, we intend by these words, the certainty of Divine Judgements, which in his justice he doth inflict upon finners. Severe execution among men, ufeth to inflift upon finners. Severe execution among men, utent to proceed from great weath, and eager revenge; the judgements of God, infinitely more dreadful, that they may be underflood to be what they are, (though that will not ferve neither, to make us underfland them, as indeed they are) we use the fame termes. Though the speech be no proper of it self, yet it is most true, as it is intended. As if we call a crafty man, a Fox; and an innocent harmlesse man, a Lamb: (which are similitudes taken from the nature of beasts) if both the one and the other, be so and so indeed; we speak truly, though not properly. The Plalmist therefore when he saith, that according to his sea, loss the wrath of God : his meaning is, as I apprehend him, in opposition to them who maintained, that God need not be feared, quia net potest irafci, nec nocere; (as the forementioned heathen author Speaks) that is, in the Prophet Zephaniah his expression. That the I and will do no good, neither will be do any evil, Zoph. 1. 2. his meaning, I fay is, That the fear of God is no vain thing : that he hath dreadful judgements in store, against them that tear him not, nor dread his judgements. If such figures, the ornament of all language; fuch rhetorical, emphatical amplifications be allowed to humane Writers, and well enough understood in ordinary language; why not to holy Writers as well, who had to do with men, as well as others; whose end also was, to use such expressions, as might affect and move? That humane Witers have faid as much of the fecurity of good and godly men, I shall need to go no further than Horace his Ode, Integer vita feelevifque pain, &c. Most dangerous then, and erroneous is the inference of fome men, yea of fome Expositors, here upon these words of the Psalmist, that no godly man can suffer by the plague, or pessione : not is old Lastantius his affection much sounder, Non potest e.go fieri, quin hominem justum inter discimina tempessatum, sec. that no just man can perish by war, or by tempest; Justit. 1. c. 18. Most Interpreters conclude here, that the godly are profused. preserved in times of publick calamities; which, in a right fense may be true: but withal they should have added, that all godly men are not exempted, at such times; to prevent rash judgements. The first of these, which may feem ftrangeft, now that men are grown much colder in their devotions, and gladly take hold (quo pres, qua injuria; as ellewhere is fluwed) of Christs words, concerning spiritual worship, to savout their bodies: as it was very common among devout Jews, used by Christ himself, (Mat. 26.36. and fell on his face : and Mar. 4.35. and fell on the ground:) fo was it in great the among ancient Christians, as to any that are verted in their writings, must need appear. But though this be true conce ning these words and rites, in general; yet whether here true, to the intention of the Pfalmift, may be yet whether here true, to the intention of the Plainit, may be doubted. For had he aimed at those three Several pointers, a man would think, according to the rules of Rhetorick, that he should rather have begun with specifing or incurvation, as the best of the three. and so have proceeded to profiration, the lowest, and most abject kinde of adoration. Except we shall make an inverted kinde (and fuch there be to be found fometimes) of chinax of it : not unlike Plal . walketh not : flandeth not : fitteth not : not fitting, or fland-Pial, I. watgeto not : Hanacto not : Hiteto not : not pittos, or flanding, being a lefs commendation, (in the intention of the Pfalmit, according to most Expositors) than not walking. But I will bind no man to this interpretation, For as certain it is, that the first word is often used for worthing or adoration, in general; which as it was variously performed with either kneeling; bowing, or falling; so is that word, and the Greek neorxurar, (which doth answerit) joyned word, and the Greek προσκυνην, (which notif aniwer it) joyned with any one of those three. However, though the Pfalmist do not mention all postures, yet by those two that he mentions, he may compreh:nd any other kinde, and so be understood by us (with most compreh:nd any other kinde, and so be understood by us (with most compreh:nd any other kinde, and so be understood by us (with most compreh:nd any other kinde, and so be understood by us (with most compreh:nd any other kinde, and so be understood by us (with most compreh:nd any other kinde, and so be understood by us (with most compreh:nd any other kinde, and so be understood by us (with most compreh:nd any other kinde, and so be understood by us (with most compreh:nd any other kinde, and so be understood by us (with most compreh:nd any other kinde, and so be understood by us (with most compreh:nd any other kinde, and so be understood by us (with most compreh:nd any other kinde, and any other kinde, and any other kinde, and so be understood by us (with most compreh:nd any other kinde, and a expositors) as intending all kinde of adoration, mental, corporal: all kinde, and by all forts of expressions used among men: as who is the object, (to wit, God : the Lord our maker) the onely object of all true adoration ; due unto him from all men, all creatures of the world. The fifthis, that what in Chronicles is exhibited as one fingle Pfalm; in this Book it makes two, (if we may call two, one whole, and part of another) and these two, at that distance one of another, that no suspition can be of any such coherence, either of words or matter, as we finde in fome other Pfalms, that follow one another as for example, tween the 105, & 106. Befdes, that which is first here, is last there; and that which is last here, is there first. vid himself might afterwards divide, and contrive into a new form, what himfelf had first joyned, or joyn afterwards, what he had first joyned, or joyn afterwards, what he had first divided. Neither would it be a difficult matter to finde out a coherence of sense, if we make but one Plalm of it. However, as it doth the fitting to 6 the hills are 1 not appear by the Chronicles, that what is there put together, in order order of context, was intended for different Plalms : So neither is it certain, that it was intended but for one. We reade there, indeed, in our English Translation, That on that day David delivered first this no on enguin Trainiation, that on the had your active real fift the Pfalm to thank the Lord, &c. this Pfalm; a so of one; but that being but the supplement of the Trainslator, it may as well be supplyed, these Pfalms, as this Pfalm; as indeed it is by some, who finde three feveral Pfalms in that Chapter : the first, from v.8. to 23. the fecond from 23, to 34, the third from 34, to 37, ending in those words, Amen, and praise the Lord. So that the matter being uncertain, we may spare our labour of further reasoning about it. However, this feems to be clear by the text (a fecond thing to be observed) that this Pfalm, or Pfalms, (whether two or three, or but one there, which here makes one, and part of another) were of the first. if not the very firft, that ever David publified. And then what reafon can we give, why fo many should go before, which certainly were of a later date? But whether the Pfalms were digested by any other certain observations, is not certain: Certain it is, that the order of time (which is considerable in the argument of divers plalms) was not observed. See also upon Pial 1, and Pial 72. last words. faid, it feemed clear by the Text: I must adde, as it is ordinarily translated. But I finde a different translation of those words, Not to mention the yulgar Latine, which turns it quite another way Icarned Grotins translates the whole verse thus : Hot autem inprimis cotempre David conflicting the Halph of collegation hadacteur Deut; that is, And David at that time took, effectal care, that Gon might be praifed by Afah, and bis tollegue. Whose opinion also is, that David having made these Psalms before, as they are here represented in the book of Psalms, did so joyn and put them together afterwards, upon that occasion of the ark. This Psalm then which few Interpreters take notice of, hath a double relation. For as it stands here alone, by it felf, it is a meer prophesic of the conversion of the Gentiles to the faith, who therefore are here called upon to praise God for it ; but as it is represented in the Chronicles as part of a longer Pfalm, or joyned with others, whether one, or more, it had a further and more immediate use, being then fung at and upon the bringing in of the Ark by David into Jerusalem.

See before, · that the Lord reigneth | Much ado there hath been about this place; and some men, to this day, make great boast of it; thinking thereby to prove and evince against all gainsayers, the corruption of the Original Hebrew. Certain it is, that divers Ancients of great antiquity; as Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Cyprian, and some thers, found it in their Translations, Kuei @ BasiAiuser and Edaw: Dominius regnavit à ligno; that is, The Lord hath reigned by his croffe; who therefore suspected, that the enemies of Christs cross, the Jews, had purposely, by omission of these words, which made against them, played the plagiaries. But the greater number of Ancients that have been fince, neither found in their Copies, neither object in their Comments any fuch thing unto them; neither is it in either Greek or Latine Copies of these dayes. There is nothing indeed in the whole Plalm, but is very applyable that way : no part almost of the Psalms, but is. However, I do not conceive that this can necessarily be inferred (as fome argue) from thefe first words the Lord reigneth; as though it could not be meant of God, the Father, whole Kingdom, they fay, was from everlafting, and did not then begin. For according to the Scripture pheafe, God is there faid to reign, when the Justice of his administration (often clouded by the prosperity of the wicked in, this world: whereof fee upon pfal. 37, and pfal. 73, &c. at which times atheifm doth use to abound) by just judgements executed upon the wicked, and profane, and facrifegious, is made confpicuous unto men. Neither is it to be questioned, but that it was intended to that use by the holy Ghost, by way of mystical application and interpretation. Which though to us Christians most considerable now, yet ought we not to neglect the immediate, literal, historical fense: of which, (besides that it is the ground of the mystical, fenic: of which, (befides that it is the ground of the myfited, and even for to be fought into, that we may know what we ground upon, and how far we may know what we ground upon, and how far we may go, to keep out felves within boands; a good ule is to be made upon leveral occasions, by good and syleotations. We say therefore, that four notable victory, or deliverance, having been the immediate occasion; by the word righteringfit, we must here understand, literally, goodness and metry; of which signification, see upon Psal. 13. 10-liter main the victibusefies. And themsels is becaused, there 71.2. Deliver me in thy righteen fiels, And though it be granted, that Prophets fometimes fpeak of things future, by the Practerit, thereby the better to express their own confidence, (and to breed it in others) of a certain accomplishment: Yet here the immediate cause of these Praterits, The Lord hath made known, hath shewed, &c. is because they related immediately to somewhat, which in very ecc. is because they related immediately to iomewhat, which in very deed, was already pasted and done. Now if any man shall ask, what that should be (literally taken) that God should be faid, openly to have shewed in the sight of the heathen . as in this verse: or, to have been seen by all the ends of the earth, as in the next? first we answer, that we must allow facred Poets and Orators Rhetorical amwer, that we must allow lacted procts and Orators Rhetorical amplifications, as well as others; if we allow them to be Pocts and Orators: and for it were fome notable victory, or deliverance, such as we reade of many in facted records, the same whereof could not at leaft, but spread to all neighbour Nations and King-doms on all sides. V. 18. and the rocks for the conies The Hebrew word; 1100 both here, and Prov. 30, 26. rendred in English, conies, is more probably thought by others, to fignific Erinaceum, a Hedge-hog; or fome such kind, described by St. Jerom, (Epist. 135. ad Sun. of Free.) to have the shape, partly of a Mosse, and partly of a Bear: and therefore called in those parts, and that their habitashiftes, that Judge doth abound with such, and that their habitation is in rocks. That it should not be the cony, may hence also very probably be inferred, because the hare and the conic are reputed but one genus, though a different fpecies; fo that both are thought to be comprehended under the general word of חורנבת, Lev. 11.6 where verse s. the 700 is also mentioned by its felf, as a diffe-

Whether any particular kinde, as the whale (of which there be many differences) be intended by that word; or whether it be a common name for all great fifthes, of which tome seas afford great variety, is not easie to determine. Now because this plague was a confequent, but in another respect, of their glutrony, it is therefore withly and figuratively termed, teamele. Another readon is given by some learned Interpretures, why the Propher rather alchibe word [17] leannesse; then 1730 plague, (Moses his word, Num, 11, 33.) because, as they conceive, he would thereby allude to 187, good will, or pleasure, as it he intimated that by the 132 (or rasins), that is, pleasure, or satisfaction of their mind, they purchased to themselves 1317 (rasion) even a deadly learning, that consumed many of them: a fit recompence for their extravagant luft, Many such racite allusions there be in the Scriptures, the observation whereof doth much conduce to the understanding of the matter and are the facrifices of the dead | Sacrifices offered to the dead Idols, Pfal 115. 5. which neither have, nor ever had any reality of being. This Interpretation palleth for current among Expositors scarce any that I know of excepted. Yet is it not satisfactory to all men. For fome (no professed Expositors, but occasionally treating of these words in learning not inferiour to any, make this to be the fense; They did ear, or partake of those funeral banquets, which a mong divers Idolatrous Nations (as the Grecians and Romans) were used by way of Solemn Parentation (whether in honour, or for any other respect) to the dead. And these they make to have been the proper facrifices belonging to the worthip of that particular Idol. Baal-phegor perchance might be the man himfelf, or the name of a man, once Prince or King among the Moabites, whose memory might among other idolatrons rites, be worshipped in and by these Solemn Feasts. This Interpretation may the better be thought of, if it be confidered, first that Idols are not any where else in the Scripture so called, as by the common Interpretation of the word dead, this should be here; and secondly, that this belonging to all idols in general, to be dead in this fenle, it is not fo likey, comparing the words with the history in Moses, and the words there, this should be the meaning here, but rather somewhat that was more particular unto that particular idol. But the aggravation in the words of the Pfalmift, which makes his expression much more emphatical, is also very considerable. For there was not, according to the Law, in Lev. 11, and Num 19. any pollution or abomination (ritual and external) greater than that which was contracted (whether by any contaction, or cohabitation) from the dead. So that without respect to the Idolatry of it, to eat of the saerifices of the dead, must needs found among the Jews, as a matter of great horrour and deteffation. This aggravation will not hold according to that common interpretation, if the dead be taken here figuratively, for them that have no real being. It is also very possible, that the Pfalmist might allude to the very name of Baad Peor, or peger in Hebrew doth fignific a dead corpse. I know Peor, is written with a U not a 1 in the Original. But the affinity may appear, in that many words written in the Hebrew with a Aim, are expresfed in Greek with a Gamma, as Gomorra, Gaza, &c. and in allufions we must not look for identity, but affinity, Many such there be in the Scripture (as all men grant) in proper names especially, both in pronunciation and writing more remote than this. I shall not now make inquisition into the right meaning of those words either Tobie 4.17. Pour out thy bread on the burial of the just, but give nothing to the wicked : Or Eccles. 30: 18. PSAL. CVII.

The drift and purpose of this Psalm is , to affert the providence of God towards men, against all, either absolute atheists, who deny the being of God; or Epicures, who deny, that God takes any care at all of men, to do them either hurt or good. Now the Divine providence being two waies, especially, considera-ble; either in that order (both for the constancy, and beautifulneffe of it, equally admirable) which he hath fet to nature, in things meerly natural, which we may call his Creating providence, or in those things, which in the nature of chances and accidents, because both various and uncertain (whether to many together, or to every particular man) happen in the world; which we may call his executive, or administrative providence: as the first kinde was set out before, in a plalm by it felf, to wit, the 104 pfalm; which for the loftiness, and other orna-ments of it, hath ever been accounted an exquisite piece: so is the fecond, with much elegancy and fublimity, in this prefent Pfalm. Yet all particulars of Gods providence in that kinde, are not here handled, but some only, wherein it is mo? eminent, as in saving men in adversity, and succouring them in their manifold necessities and extremities, to which this mortal life is exposed: there being no title among men more mortaine bespores: there being no threamong mean most glorious, or which commends Religion unto men more; than of a Saviour and Deliver. That all people and nations of the word in general, not any one particular Nation, are intended by the Pfalmift, as the object of that goodneffe of God which he doth here celebrate and fet out, if the tenour of the words and context it felf doth not sufficiently (which I think it

It is the opinion of the Jews at this day, as by fome of their gloffes upon Deut, 4, 19, may appear the the providence of God, is their peculiar; and that God hath left all other Nations befides themfelves, to the government of the all other Nations befides themselves, to the government of the Stars, and inferiour powers, or Angels. It is not improbable, that some such opinion might be in those antient time; too, among some of them. Sich an infatuation there is among many Christmass too, who upon a sond perswasions, that themselves are the only children of God, look upon other rine, as things that God had nothing to do with: not an creatures, at least, within compass of his either love or care: which they wholly, (and, upon that ground, would all worldly goods allowed the confustion of both: where World Stars and Sta is an ample confusation of both; whereby Gods goodnelle and mercy to all; in all places of the world, whether lews or Gentiles, when they call upon him with heart and affection in their perilis and necessities, is vindicated and afferted. See also upon Psalm 71, 5, thou art my trust, and Psalm 717. 3. O praise the Lord all ye nations. Some objections against the doctrine of this Psalm we shall meet with upon some of the following verfes.

Vers 1. Give thanks unto the Lord Psal, 106, 1 & 118, 1, & 136, 1, This notable sentence was in the beginning among the Jews, as some are of opinion, used as the versus intercacharu (the foot, or tenor of the long) of many facred hymns intercacalaria (the 1001, or tenor of the long) of many lacred hymns being the part of the opposite Quire, at certain paules and intervals, while they were linging.

But there may be an objection. For if, as we have said, this extend to all people and nations promiscuously; that is, to mankind in general , How shall they call on him , may fome body fay, in whom they have not believed? or how shall they believe n him, of whom they have not heard? &c. (in the Apostles words, Rom. 10. 14) I answer, that this is not to be understood of formal praying, according to the prescript of Gods Word in all tormal praying, according to the preferrite of Goods World in all circumflances; but of fuch, as nature in fuch-extremities doth tiggeft; and fuch as God out of his tender mercy and compaffion towards his poor creatures, is fometimes pleased to accept of in such cases. And what wonder is it, if the Ravens in their need, are faid to have their cries, which God is faid to hear, (Pfal. 147. 9. Joh 38. 41.) that men, though not otherwise instructed, or prepared, should finde cries at such times, which should move God, their maker, to compassion? Well, but it is not the true God that they cry unto, (fuch as know him not, I mean) but some falle god they cry unto, (fush as know him not. I mean) but fome taile god, a dol, as teither Jupiter, or Mercury, or Neptune, or Caffor and Pollux; (the once proper gods of Mariners, among the ancient Heathens,) or the like: and how hould the true God hear them? diffress, and be delivered (or, delivereth) them out of their disfresser: That is as many as are delivered, it is by God, that they are delivered. He is the author of all salvation; both temporall and eternal, unto all men. Why all are not delivered, that call upon him at fuch a time, is not for us to give a reason, Sure we are, if all were, at all times, it would much alter the whole frame and conflitution of the world; and by degrees we may come to ask, why God hath not made all men immortal. For may come to ask, wny coa natu not made air men immortal. For once would doy, it alwaise sheard when they cry. It is the fame reason of the fick, as of others, yerse 17, 18.8c. I think it fast to say to, than to refolve the question, as some do, That they the wicked only, that so perith; whom God will have examples of his judgements, and just feverity; as the others, whom he faof his judgements, and just tevertry; as the others, whom he fa-verth, though wicked too, of his mey: I date not think that all that milicarry either by land, or by water, are impious, I tanker believe, that many both just and pious, undergo fometimes, in the fame thiny or otherwise, the fame fortune with them that are not, There be fecrets of providence; which though we understand not, yet we must not deny. Christ would not have us to judge them, uppn whom the Tower of Siloe fell; or them whose to judge them, uppn whole the 1 ower to since tell; of them whole blood Pilate mingled with facrifices, greater finners than other men, Luke 13, 1,2, &c. God forbid we should condema any for any temporal calamity. One reason why sometimes some good and godly miscarry as well as others, may be, that they that are so, should not be too bold and secure; which might prove very prejudicial to them in other respects; and that when they are delivered, they may be the more heartily thankful, which is for their good, ann Gods glory. from the womb of the morning : thou hast the dew of thy youth]

These words are very variously both translated and expounded. The chief ground of the difference is, partly from the accent in the word 311002; (morning) which usually distinguishes between the members of one fentence, or verfe; but sometimes is observed to fland for some other use, and not for distinction: and partly from the militake of divers ancients, taking the D in TIDD for a preposition; and lastly from the ambiguity of the word TIDD by some fition; ond laftly from the ambiguity of the word PITTy by fone translated juvenity; or; juvenit is by others: nationals, or juvenity. Here in our English, as also by Junius, the accent is observed, as a dilliction: But by most others, and those very learned and accent one, the words, from the womb of the morning, are joyned with shade that follows to this effect; extern auror a (or, as forme others, but not so with a direct, about one of well, ab along, ab aurors) this to generationits, or, juventalis not so well, ab along, ab aurors) this to generationits, or, juventalis not to well, ab utero, ab aurora) the best all the dew of thy youth, or, nativity. Now for the fense of the words not ancients have nativity. It was not the the thought that the eternal generation of Christ, the Son of God, and some both ancient and later Expositors, that his humane, or miraculous Incarnation in the womb of the bleffed Virgin, was intended :and there be words indeed, fome, that will fit wel enough to either, Nevertheleffe the most and most approved of later Expoto enter. Neverthere the most and most approved in rate: Experience, upon a more accurate fearch into the words, have judged, that not Christ himles was here spoken of; but the multitude of people that should be converted unto Christ, upon the first preaching of the Gospel: very fidy compared to the monthing daw; or more poerically, to the dew of the womb of the morning; both to exprelle the multitude, who should, as it were, over-pread the earth; as the dew doth use to cover it; and the manner of their heavenly generation, by the immediate operation of Gods Holy Spirit, Some think that Micha did allude to these words of the Pfalmit, where he faith; And the remnant of Iacob shall be in the midft of many where he laith, And the remnant of faced hadt be in the middle finant people: at deep, at the flowers upon the grafte that startish not from, nor waiteth for the fins of men, Mic. 5-7. As for the word, Pi-Pi if according to fome, the translated addelecture, inserting to the financial state of the starting to fine learned Expeditors, which the phenoment of the conditions of the financial starting that the product of the financial starting that the fubtile, as I doubt it may, then, juvenius, or, pueritia, may according to others, meerly be for foboles, that is, a new brood, which in effect comes to the fame as generatio, or, nativitas; as the word is expounded by them that follow that interpretation. Other interpretations there be, which I think not needfull here to relate. Learned Grotius translates the whole verse thus, Populus trus promptissimus erit in die pralii pulcherrime praparatus: Ros (id eft, unde proles tibi nafcetur) erit ut ros ab utero aurora. It agrees, as to this latter part, with that that hath already been fet down, and commended as the most accurate.

But this threely testions, though by many approved of, seems not seasonable in this palee; the Psainith directing his speech by way of exhortations of the season of th on to all that went under that name, among whom, those that were hyporries; that is, that lived not according to their profession, might be as fit an object of his exhortation, as any others. on, must no as in an object or nie exnortation, as any others, Nay, it might more probably be objected, that the exhortation was not very needful, if one were intended, but those who did already, truly and cordially far God, which may very well be thought to include some truft in God. I think therefore that the interpretation of the ancients (many times laid afide, when those that are not comparable to them are taken in their room) is much to be preferred, who take these words, Te that fear the Lord; not in a common use and notion; but as a title, or denomination, by use, among the Jews, appropriated to a peculiar fort of people, who lived among the Jews, being that no Jews born, nor yet circumcifed, or absolute prosclytes: but yet part of the Jews, in generall; because they lived among them, and worthipped the same God, with them, and were obliged to many performraces, though not to all that the natural lews, or abfoliute profelyres were. PSAL CXVII.

Verse I. Praise the Lord, all ye nations, praise him, all ye people? Rom. 15, 11. We should not make any question of the mystical sense, or application to Christ, and the Gentiles, though we had not St. Pauls authoritie for it, (Rom. 15.11.) it being for maturall, and obvious at leaftto any that are read in the Prophets, where so often foretell this conversion of the Geatles uno Chilt, by the preaching of the Gospel, and speak of it so glori-oully, as an argument of joy unto all Nations. However, though Expositers content themselves with this, yet it hath already been faid upon divers other Pfalms, I know no reason why we should palle by; or if not obvious, neglect the inquition of a more literall, and immediate fenfe. But indeed, obvious enough here, as I consider the inquition of a more literally and immediate fenfe. But indeed, obvious enough here, as I consider the indeed of ceive. For though God did in great mercy adopt to himlest the lews (for a season) as a peculiar people; and sile himlest their Cod lea or a season as a peculiar people; and sile himlest their lews (for a season) as a peculiar people; and sile himlest their least the season as a peculiar people; and sile himlest their least the season are season as a peculiar people; and sile himlest their least the season are season as a peculiar people; and sile himlest their least the Gnd in a more peculiar manner : yet did he never fo forfake other, nations, or withdraw his kindnelle from them, as that they flouid not have occasions both ordinary, and extraordinary to gloribe him for his goodness and mercie. Besses sunday passages in other Pfalms: we have one entire Pfalm (one of the most fubline for the, flyle of it, in the whole book :) written to that purpofe : the fubjet wereof is often repeated, o that men would praife the Lard for his goodness, and for his wonderfull works to the children of men. Plat. 107, veries, 8, 15, 21, 31. See there upon the argument of the following men, risk following the argument of the Pfalm, and upon verie 6. Then they are the Acc, and, and he delivered, See, If therefore then, even when true religion was the priviledge of one nation, and God in fome manner appropriated unto it yet even then holy Prophets, infigired by the holy Ghoft, did well upon all men, and all nations to praife God: (not rhetorically neither, or hyperbolically, as when dumb creatures are called upon to praile on appea outcastly as when a numb creatites are called upon to praise God: as is well obferred by Calvin, though upon another occasion, but finghy and literally:) to praife God; I fay, to acknow the control of the godder and his wonderful work; a so Plain tot, or at it, it is there, his mortiful kindness, and this trust (ver.) how great and and the control of th and miserable is their blindness, and sottish infatuation; who in thele daies, (ever fince Christ) of publick grace and mercies (we speak not here of faving grace and mercy, not outwardly and publickly differnable:) wherein, all nations have equal intereft; would ingross God wholly to themselves, and as they conceive his would inguise some whonly to incinerves, and as they conceive his mercy and goodness to be their peculiar; so neither would they have Godto accept of the prayers or praises of any others, but such as come from themselves? All the herefies of the world put together, cannot amount to more impiety : and yet is the fottifinels and ridiculousnels of the opinion, greater, than the im-

V. 2. and the truth of the Lord Interpreters in their mystical Expositions, as they distinguish between people, (by which they understand the Jews particularly) and nations; that is, the Gen-tiles; in the former verse: so here; merciful kindness, they would have to belong to the nations; because, say they, God was not obliged to them by any promife; and truth, to the Jews But even they that do not diftinguish between people and nations; in the former; (for all do not, I confelle:) yet here between mercy, (or merciful kindness;) and truth they do. We have spoken of the difference elsewhere, upon Pfalm 17.10. For thy mercy is great and there also showed how they might be taken for one and the same thing. Which sense, I think; would do well here too: although we may fay, if need be, that God had bound himfelf to the Gentiles by his Prophets, as well as to the Jews, for a future Redeemer: and so his truth, even so distinctly taken, might belong unto them too, according to the mystical fense: neither do we want promises of another nature, made by God to mankinde in general; for performance whereof, they might be called upon to praife him, to make good that other fenfe, which we have spoken of: although, as I said before, there is no need of that diftinction here.

PSAL, CXIX.

This is one of the Alphabetical Pfalms, of which, fee upon Pfal. 25. at the end The chief end of this Pfalm, as by the matter, length, and style doth appear, seems to have been to disingage the thoughts and affections of men that have a fense of piety, from all worldly objects, and to fettle them upon the study, love, and estimation of piety and godliness: to which end, the frequent reading of it, where there is a disposition to goodness, doth marvellously conduce, as also to keep the soul in a constant plight of humble, meek, and harmleis simplicity: the cera tain effect, and necessary consequent of true mortification, and fanctification. It is penned with great plainness and simplicity of ftyle, fritable to the matter, and fitted for all capacities. The fame things are ten inculcated; and t e fame words repeated, Yea there he fome words, ten in number, all which almost fignifie the fame thing, so often repeated, that in the whole Pfalm, (as hath been observed by some) consisting of 176 verses in all there is but one verse, where some of them, one, or more, are חורה חוכום מצוח ; חורה חוכום חורה חוכום לקירום טרורן משפטים אסרה רבר צרק דרה that is Law, flatures, precepts, commandments, refinencies, judgements, word, righteenfiness, way. The number will not hold in the English, because two of the Hebrew words, 27, 27, and 27, 20, are rendred by one in English, to wit, word However, we may make up the number, adding ordinances, as the word ______ (commonly, judgements) is sometimes translated; as verl, gr. This of these ten Hebrew words, and of their frequent repetition throughout the whole Plaim, but one verse, (the 121) excepted, I finde in two, Bucerus and Vatablus: and they had is from some of the Rabbines. For both Kimki, and Ben Ezra, have some such thing: though they speak but of eight words; and make a further mystery of it, because the whole Psalm is composed, or digested by Octonaries. But it is never good to take things upon truft, where a man may use his own eyes. For I doubt there may be more yerses found besides the 1:2, where none of those either eight or ten words are used. As for example, verf. 90. חוטמרי עול אורי ורור אמוניתך כוננים אורי עול אורי ורור אמוניתך כוננים אורי ווייניתר אורי ווייניתר אורי I would not have any unadvifedly to afcribe this, (as possible fome might) to any viciation of the Originall Copies, which is but meer overfight of their eyes. Now if any be offended with these frequent repetitions, I would have them to consider, that they were but according to the first intention of the author, the better to express his zeal to the Word of God, and therefore fall not within compass of tautologies: and that there is as much art in repeating the fame words, so often, with so much variation of sense; as in finding diversity both of matter and words,

A late learned man, who hath taken great paines about Scripture Geography, doth endeavour to affere this version of the LXX. in this place, as true and genuine; against the Chaldees, and other later ones : and in my judgement, he hath done it; if not undoubtedly, yet very plaufibly. I will not find others against so many translators, of fame and credit: I my felf shall take the liberty, to embrace what I think most probable.
One of his reasons is; Mesech, when taken for a proper name in Scripture, as in Moles, and Ezckiel, often ; it is always, (this one outpause, as an enucesame Exercise, orten , it is always, (this one controverted place excepted) yound with rhabd. PSAL CXXI.

Verfe r. T Will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help] I am forry to find fome Expositors, men otherwise of no small account, so ready to find fault, where there is on that straine: vox inconsiderata, and the like. Here again they except against these words, as uttered in a fir of impatience, or infidelity: which though they confesse it did not last long, but was presently checkt by the Psalmist himself in the next verse: yer I conceive they do him a great deal of wrong, in imposing their own conceive they do him a great deal of wrong, in impofing their own fancies, upon his words, and expressions: which I conceive nor enely blameleffi-but very emphatical, in a quite' contrary sense. They spend many words upon this argument, to make their imaginary charge good but I will not spend many, to relate them. It shall institute me, to have given the Reader warning, and the Prophet need no other vindication, than to have his words made so clear, which we hope we shall) that there shall be no ground left for any slipticion. Judea is (was I am sure, and is still, I think) avery mountanous Country. The whole land is called a bill, for that reason. Even I set 12 seconding to help I transvers. Now that reason, Exod. 15. 17. according to best Interpreters. Now becule men, multitudes of men, upon high mountains, may be feen far off; they that did expect the help of men, or armies, coming to their release, when their condition did require speed, it is likely they did often lift up their eyes towards the mountains, round about. Certain it is, that upon this situation of the Country, and out. Certain its, that upon this incustion of the Country, and common use of men, in expectation: many feeches are grounded in the Scriptures; in the Prophets especially. As for example: The beautiful point the mountains are the feet of him that bringesh godydings; that publishest peace, — that faith unto Sion, thy Gul rightle, E. J. A. 7. The Plaintit therefore here, alluding to this common speech and use, most sweetly and elegantly declareth that he alfo will lift up his eyes: but to mountains, from which he certainly knows, that falvation will come to him, Had he fald no more then fo; yet I do not conceive that his meaning would have been very doubtful, or obscure: not more doubtful, or obscure; than where he faith : Lead me to the rock that is higher than I Pfal, 61:2.

alluding there too, very fweetly and wittily, to the fituation of the Country, and cuftom of men, in times of publick diffreffe, as is there noted. But then when in the very next verse he doth so plainly ex-expectation of help from any other hill, than heaven: (which fometimes also is called a hill; as is here observed by some :) the lometimes and is called a mit; as is here observed by some:) the most proper object as well of our eyes, as of our hearts: for which also man, by Gods providence. unto the bills] Some are of opinion that Mount Sion and Moriah, unto the only some are or opinion that mount sion and mortan, upon which the Sanctuary flood (upon one of them, at leaft; but supposed to stand upon both, because of the neernest:) might be intended by the Plalmist. And true it is that help and falvation, (or to that effect) is faid fometimes to come from the Sanctuary, where God was pleased in those dayes to manifest himself, and to afford the effects of his presence, to humble supplicants, after a more peculiar manner : and not to come from the Sanctuary onely, but from those hills also. See before upon Pfal. 14. 7. Out of Zion ; and Pfal. 5.7. towards thy holy Temple. We will not therefore reject this, if any like itt but prefer, in our own judgement, the former interpretation : as more proper to the place, and more emphatical. Either of these interpretations will serve to save us from that different bur violent, interpretation in the margin: Shall I lift up mine eyes to the hills ? whence flould my help come ? There will be no need of this fhift: though of the two, I should think that more tolerable, than to asperse the Psalmist, and to lay the blame of our mistakes upon him wrongfully.

And this was Davids cafe here, as appears by his words, verse 1. Out of the depths; to wit, of misery, crosses and calamities; as best Interpreters there: as also by those, verse 7, and with bim is plenteous redemption : which are intended of deliverances from temporal calamity: His aym therefore, in faying that there is forgiveneffe with God, is mainly to the confequent of his forgiveneffe, or remussion of sins; to wit, deliverance, or help in advertity. He addes therefore, that thou mayeft be feared: that is, in effect, ut colaris; that thou mayeft be worshipped : for feare worthip of God: which is well observed by some Expositors here, And as the Pfalmift faith here, that God forgives (that is, helps, and delivers) and therefore is feared; so elsewhere, that because and activers) and theretore is feared; to ellewhere, that because his feared, for workinped, therefore he delivers. To which purpose are those words; take as a father priteth hutchildren; for the Lord pitteth bene that fear him, Pelan 103, 13. It is a main ground of Gods working, to believe that God is merciful and gracuous; that is both able, and willing to help mon, but those that fear him especially) in misery and afficition. When therefore Epicurus maintained that God was to be feared, or worshipped, proprer excellentiam natura, though he did not at all interesse himself in humane affaires, neither to do good or hurt unto any; yet to be fea-red, for the excellency of his Nature: wife Heathens well inferred upon it, that this was but a meer pretence of his, because he would not be thought to abolifh all religion among men; but that in effect, he did absolutely deny a God; or at least, that God was to be feared, or worshipped by men. PSAL CXXXII.

Verse I. T Ordremember David] Who was the authour of this Pfalm, whether David, or Solomon, is not certainly known, But either David, or Solomon, is generally agreed upon. But being the Book beareth the name of David, and that no other Name is here prefixed to this particular Pfalm; I think it is more warrantable, if no material objection can be made against it, to adscribe it unto David himself. It is true he speaketh in the third person, all the way : but a reason is given of that, because he inoccasion; to be used either by his son and succellour Solomon; as some believe: or by the whole assembly, as others: the like whereof we had before, Plal. 20. & 21. where David for the same rea-fon (as there observed) speaketh in the third person: Remember thi burnt offerings, &c. As for this form of commending ones felfe to God, by the word Remember: we have the like Nehem. 13. 14.
21.29 31. Neither is it improbable, that Nehemiah therein did imitate David: wherein we have a further confirmation also, that David was the authour. See more concerning this word and form, upon the Title of Pfal.38, to remember, Remember David and all his afflillions] Of all things that Da-Remomer Davin and an in agriculty of all timings that David now did in his life time, among all his good acts, which made him fo gracious both with God and men; and gor him the reputation of an incomparable Poince upon Holy Records there was not any thing wherein he either pleafed himfelf more, or had more confidence in towards God; than in those things that he did for God immediately, that is, for his Ark: his Temple, and the service of immediately; that is, for its Afric ins. Lemple, and the terrice of his Temple, to fee that feteled and efablished in his dayest or at leaft to provide for the fettling and efablishing of it in his founter reign. Yet firange it is to fee, that notwithflanding his zeal, his piecy, and the fincerty of his heart, how much he was put to it, and partly put of, and disappointed in those his godly designes. For the Ark, when he first attempted it, he was deferred by unexpected e-vents, and durst not proceed any further: and in the mean time, God knoweth what inward consustion, and perplexity of spirit his foule did fusteine: Three moneths he then continued in that cafe, which is very long, for such a condition. A fernwards, when he purposed to build a Temple to God. (for which who would have thought any man fitter than David? a Prince of such esseem with God, and so zealous for God, as we may boldly fay, no Prince ever was more) yet even then was his personal persormance in ever was more) yet even then was no perional periormance in that great and glorious work, (though his purpole and defire was) not accepted of. We would not interie from hence, that David was leffe dear unto God, much leffe, leffe religious, than common was lelfe dear unto Joa, much neue, neue reugious, man common-ly apprehended to have ben: God forbid, that we fhould inferre from this, that if good and godly Princes (as Hittories will tell us of many) be dilappointed of their purpoles, and fome of thead feem to milicarry, even to the loft of their lives, and Kingdomes, when they laboured and took great pains to fettle religion, and to advance Gods worship in a Kingdome; we should not wonder at it, and either murmure against God and his justice, because we cannot penetrate into the depth of his Counfels: or have a leffe opinion of the worth and piety of those Princes, because they had no better successe in their pious enterprises. David it seems, what from reason, what from divine revelation, was sufficiently secured, that God did accept of his pious endeavours, though he was not pleased to give them accomplishment, in his life time and though to those that took effect; he added much trouble and affillion. For to thole that took effect, he added much trouble and applithins, For not only here, but Flain 38, & 70, when he was in great extermity, he made bold with Godsto antitle thole two Pfalmes, (whereoffee upon Flain, 38), "Plain" for remembrane: as it fall most that he could possibly think of, to draw Gods help and a fulfance, had been included in that one word, whereby he did put him in mind of his ceal for his Church, and fervice. PSAL. LXXXIV.

Verse 1. All ye fervants of the Lord Whio are they, to whom the Pfalmist doth here addresse himself, with this title of ervants of the Lord, I find three leverall opinions. Some think the Jeruants of the Lora; a not trice leveral opinions. Some difficult Levites only, becaule of them particularly, which we do not of others, we read that they had charge of the Temple by night; as well as by day: 1 Chron.9, 33. Others, take no notice of this; but because they conceive the last vete; The Lord that made, &c. to contain a fet form of blefsing, and that it belonged only to the Priefts to bleffe the people, Numb 6.23, therefore they would have the Priefts only intended: though afterwards they take in the Levites too; as if they also, but upon what ground they tell us not, had had a commission to bleffe, For certainly, Numb.6.23. by Asron and his sonnes , the Priests only can be intended : as is further ron and my joines, the rivers only can be medica; as suttoer confirmed, Deut. 21.5. And the Priefts, — For them the Lad by God hath chylen—To belieft, &c. For as for Deut, 10.8, where is minister, and to bieffe, is promifeuoufly adderibed to the rive of Lovi n general as in fuch expressions is ordinary : it must according to belt Expositors be understood diffinctly: to minister and to blese; that is, the Levites to minister: and the Pricts, to blesse; both Pricts unst unfer Lewices or miniger; and the Prices, to begin to our right and Lewites, (for propriy called) being of one and the finer to, the tribe of Levi, which neverthelle is not without fame difficulty, or ambiguity, at leaft; because to minight was common our Prices and Lewices, as by many places of the Law doth appear, But we will not inuft lo long upon this particular, as to answer all objections. The more common, and probable opinionis, that it belonged unto the Priests only to bless the people. But that this last verse should be so taken, for a form of blessing, there is no necessity of that. The words may be taken, as some Expositors would have them, as from the Plalmist to the fervants of the Lard, (whoever intended) blefsing them in great good will for their di-ligence and afsiduity in praising God; whether of themselves, as is most likely; though he seem to exhort them to it; (which may be rather an approbation: according to that of the Poet; Soft most us fails, quod jam facis ipfe, &c.) or whether upon the enhancement in facis, quod jam facis ipfe, &c.) or whether upon the enhancement in the property of the property of the land, are meant the property of the land, are meant upon the call of the land, and th here, not only Priests and Levices, but other devoir people, who is great zeal and devotion to Gods service, commended in Anna, a spear zeal and devotion to Gods fervice, commended in Anna, a Bropheroffen videov, Luke a, 26,77, were wont to be convertiant in the Temple both nights and dayes, in fafting and praying, and there religious duties. All that I find objected against this, is that Laft verice, if it be a feet formula of blefaing; but that being very doubtfull, and as likely not to be, (as hath been faid) the objection cannot be very frong. There is none of those opinions, but built its probability, to that the Reader, for ought know, may be left free to his choyce; which hath made me to fee them down all three.

See in the Hebrew as the margin tells you: for which in the Text it self; that waited. This is some reason, why Priests and Levites should be understood in the former words, rather than others : but no concluding reason, because to stand, in that sense, is a general word, used of Poets, as well as of Priests and Levites, but indeed most proper unto them, where the House of the Lord is particularly spoken of. Yet it may be too, that the word might be used of purpole here, of them that were not fuch, to shew, that which they did, was in imitation of those, whom God did own mine particularly, above other men; for that extraordinary service which they were bound unto, above other men : in imitation of them, that God might own them also, after a more particular manner, (as out of all question he doth such) for their zeal to Him, and his Service.

And were it certain and fure, that both the Pfalmift, and his fon aimed at one and the same proverbial expression; yet is it not without example, that one and the fame expression of words; yea one and the same proverb, without any variation of words, may be used in a different sense, and to a different end. Of words and phrases, being the same, use in a different, yea contrary sense, in Scripture, and elsewhere, I could give many examples: and some have been given in these Notes, upon occasion: Of Provetbs, or proverbiall speeches, if my memory serve me nor at this time, I doubt not but with a little help either of books, or better memory, there may be found good store. And this I should rather pitch upon, than to believe that either Solomon, or St. Paul could intend the words in a precept of charity; fo (to ordinary construction, and their authority laid afide) uncharitably. But now I have dealt fo freely with the Reader (for indeed I would not conceale any truth, whether it make for, or against any opinion of mine:)

I shall now deale as freely and truly with him, in professing that this interpretation of the words of the Psalmist, though at first, upon comparing with Solomons words, very plaufible; yet upon further confideration, appeared other wife unto me. I did mention Calvin before, that he had an Exposition that came very near. It is this : Recidat molestia, quam sceleratu sermonibus mibi intentant, in capitasibsorum: Here Calvin doth not tell us, what shall become of the word operiat. which is fet out by him; and instead of it Recidat put in his place. But I improfe he intended it (though for brevity fake, he did not so fully explain himself) thus: Let the muschief, which they intended unto me by their wicked tongues, cover their own heads. which is in effect; Recidat molestia : &c. The evill which they intended unto me, let it fall upon their own heads. It is plaufible enough of it felf, as he proposeth it: but much more probabble, in my judgement, if he had observed, (which I wonder he doth not) that there is in the words, so or-(which I wonder he down not) that there is in the words, so or-dered and conflued, an allufon to verfe?; thou high covered my head in the day of battell. Many fuch ferrer, allufions of words there be in the Scripture (of another kind, fee before upon Pfal, 75. 6, nor from the South;) of which we have treated ellewhere largely. If this therefore be right, as it scemeth unto me, very plausible; Let burning coales fall upon them, in the next verse, must be construed by it self; and so the expression here apparently different from Solomons. Most Expositors are of opinion, that the Plalmist doth here allude to that fire that came from heaven, to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah: as the most dreadfull imprecation he could think of: which is very likely. Of imprecations in generall, in this Book of Psalmes. See before upon Psal. 35, ver. 4. Let them he confounded. Of Solomons words and meaning, fee there :

Hide not thy felf from my supplication : where these very words are cited. Of the word righteon resp., how to be understood in this and other like places, see upon Pfal. 71. 2. Deliver me in thy righteousnese. Of faithfulnesse, or truth, (for it is but one word in the Original Hebrew, but sometimes written full, and one word in the Original Hebrew, but tometimes written full, and functimes abbreviated by leaving out one of the radical letters;) See upon Pfal. 57. 10. For thy merry is great. But because the word is for frequent in this book, somewhat more fall be laid here also. Faithfulneffer, they fay, is adscribed unto God, for keeping of promise, I is 16, often. But then we flow, that the promises of God, for which he is so termed know, that the promises of God, for which he is so termed know, that the promises of God, so which he is so termed know. (falthful) are either particular promises, made unto particular men, as Abraham, David, and the like: or general promiles, to a whole nation; or, rather, to all men in general: as for example; That he will be the protector of them that feare him; and put their trust in hin; that upon true re-pentance and amendment of life, he will pardon iniquities: pentance and amendment of the, he will parton inquiries, that hat will be the avenger of the poor, and fatherfield, that are opprefiled by might: for thefe, and the like, fathylthefile addition of odb by the Pfalmift, as often as for keeping his word, to him (fo often inculcated by Expositors.) particularly, Again, faithfulnelf: may be addiribed mus God, not fo much in reference to any express promise, as upon a prefumption grounded upon his nature, and former experience, So because the creation of man, endowed with such and such formular, is, an argument of Gods goodness; it may be recording, it is an argument of Gods goodness; it may be refaculties, is an argument of Gods goodnesse; it may be prefumed of God, as he is a faithful creator, that he will not have the death or destruction of any man; (Ezek 33. 11.) that he will have a care of them especially, who having spent their lives, in his service, commit the keeping of their (1 Pet. 4. 19.) unto Him at their departure; who both as he is a Creatour, knows, how to value them, and how to keep them, and as he is faithful, will not disappoint them that have trusted Him, with what was dearest unto themselve. Sorras that famous trust early Noice teiplum: felic, of which fo much hash been written by the ancients, Others were ingraves upon status, or pillars of stone, errelled of purpole, and fer in high-wayer, that travellers, as they paffed by, might at the fame time, both learn, and admire. Such percelhofe called Equal, mentioned by Placo in one of his Dialogues, erretted by Hipparchus: whereof one had this Jaying, Elan disase egenis; that is, Think of right confinelic as thou goeft along; or, Practice right confinelic in thy life and convertation. Another, My of how if and is, that is, Deceive not thy friend. And is is observeable, that fach an opinion this Hipparchus had of those his sentences, that to every one of them, as ancien Painters and Statuaries to fome of their choicest pieces were wont, he did adde his Name; Menua to N. Innegye, Ma shar, Gc. Which was not done by him onely, but by some others in the same kind: as by Phocylides, who lived much about that time; not the author of that noished Noblines, now extant under that name: a very choice Piece otherwife, we confife; but not of that antiquity: but another Phocylides, of whome there remains but little; to wit, some few sentention Distiles, here and there, scattered in ancient Authors; who also bear witnesse of him, that to every such Distick his manner was toprefixe his name; in these words, Kel ro 14 Dexember: This allo is Phocylides his verse, or; sentence. By which doth appear the simplicity of that age, compared with later times. Synchius, a very responsable Author, citath Atillotic, (but not to be found, I doubt, in what now remainsth of Artifotle:), as, faying, that Proverbs, were tyadaneman: that is to fay, the relicks, or remains, of that ancient residens and philosophy, which through publick broiles and confulions of nations and king domes, (fach as we have feen; and I pray God, we do not fee the fame fruits:) was perifud. However, if that passage of Acitocic be not now extant, yet by many that are, it doth appear how much be dathed feribodro ancient Preverbs. Himself had made a collection of old Proverbs and sentences, as Diog. Lacritus in his life, doth report. In the second book of his Rhetoricks, he treateth of them largly: and in the first book, where betreatesh of refirmonies and evidences, he gives Proverby the next place after Oracles. But that which is much more wen-Merful is, the power and efficacy such senences and parables (for they were often joyned) had, to persuade men; as either to reclaim them from some vicious course, or purpose; or to allay passions of either anger or serrous or the like; whereof there be divers examples in ancient Histories: insomuch as some maintained, (of which subjett Seneca halb writin one Epiftle, or two,) that no other kind of Philosophy was nestful, as particularly, no Exhortacions, which weed non, Scimons,) to perforademento goodneffe, but this kind, which they had known to be fo successful and available in ormer inner. But now was the case much aftered, in Seneca's time, and long before; mundo jam ad lummam in former times. But now was the case much aftered, in Seneca's time, and elegion continual use and exercise, was before in the control of the peak somewhere: when moral Philosoph, through continual use and exercise, was before control of the co more sentences; then formerly the wifest Philosophers, or States-men in their most serious Discourses. A man would have thought the world, in point of life and morality, through this improvement of knowledge, fould much have amended. But it preved quite contrary, For those sentences, which once, when rare, and of difficult accesses it were, were emertained as Oracles, and accordingly wroughs upon the foules and mindes of men; were now because a men complement of language, and a delight of the ear onely; without any influence at all on the heart; fo that the very name of aburdayse, or lentence-ipcaker, became the name of a jugler, or imposter. Antiqua sapientia nihil aliud quam facienda & vitanda præcepit. Et tunc longè meliores erant. Postquam docti prodierunt, boni desunt, saith,

From all that hath been faid, hitherto; concerning these Proverbs of Solomon (not to speak of them as Canonical Evel. Scripture, which is a common confideration; but according to himmane judgement,) I would inferre particularly, First, that to value them to their worth, we must not consider them by what we see in these dayes, when learning (6 far att talk, and make a (hew) is become more common then fitter was in Solomous dayes, (1 King, 10, 21, 27,) when every pedier can make a Preacher; and many beardlesse boyes one of shops, and from the plough, with little reading and a great deal of confidence can find word enough f which some call the Sprit;) to lead whole multitudes. Certainty has Solopmon himself lysed in these describes would have been thought in the judgement of many men but a very ordinary and, in commercion of some of that indicate the solopmon himself when the solopmon himself when the solopmon himself when the solopmon himself when the solomon has a very ordinary and, in commercion of some of that indicate the solomon has a very ordinary to the solomon himself when the man, in comparison of some of these inspired tradesmen, and consider youths. Secondly, that some things are delivered with that simplicity of words, and slile, as did well agree with the constitution of those times, to which they have more particular relation, both to pleafe and to profit : though not fo well perchance, with that over-ripentfe of with and subsilty, that most men are born with in this age. But safety, that if men could withdraw themselves a little from that sometimes a substitute of the car, (of all other senses, the most immoderate hunting after the pleasure of the car, (of all other senses, the most instable; the car, (of all other senses, the most instable; the car, (of all other senses, the most instable; the car, (of all other senses, the most instable; the car, (of all other senses, the most instable; the car, (of all other senses, the most instable; the car, (of all other senses, the most instable; the car, (of all other senses, the most instable; the car, (of all other senses, the most instable; the car, (of all other senses, the most instable; the car, (of all other senses, the most instable; the car, (of all other senses, the most instable; the car, (of all other senses, the car, (of all other senses), the car, (of all other senses, the car, (of all other senses), the car, (of all other senses), the car, (of all other senses) and the car, (of all other senses). proper tempers shall I say, or diffemper of all learned agas;) and besake themselves to more sober retired reading, with automobile studies of the control with answerable serious meditation, (as necessary, as the very reading is selfe;) they may finde the power and efficacy of these Proverbs and Sentences, (even of those which at first hearing, promise but little;) as much as others have done in former ages to the amendment of their lives, and freeing of their fouls from the bondage of many unreasonable lusts and passions: than which, in very deed, no greater bondage or slavery is in the world.

Somethings besides whoever shall read these Proverbs, had need to know before hand. First, concerning coherence of matter and words, that they must not look for it; though it is very good sometimes, and apparent enough for divers versestogether; yet it is not to be expected, as a thing not endeavoured by the Author. Neither indeed was it the fathion in those dayes, to write such things otherwise than loosely and promisenously. It may appear, as by some others, so by Theognis, one of the Ancientest Gnomologues, or fentence-writers now extant, who alfo lived not many ages after Solothous, and in many things doth agree with him, as may appear to them that shall diligently compare them together. Tet of the first 9. Chapters, for the most part, the subject is but one; to wit, the commendation of wildom. And because there is not any thing that doth more strongly or dangerously either withhold, or withdraw from the study of wifdom, than bad company; but especially, the company of women: having said something in the sirst Chapter of the company of bad men; he doth often infift upon that of women, as the most dangerous of the two, (fo he found it him fift .) and doth very lively and Poetically fet out their alturements, and the fearful end of those that are deluded by them, and fall into their nets, The last Chapter containeth (for the most part) the character of a vertnow woman, and a good wife. In all the rest, there is but little coherence of matter, except (as I said before) here and there of some few verses, that hang togeth r.

Secondly, that fome things, yea many, are often repeated. And this will bring us to a farther confideration of the Author. That Solomon is the Author of this Book of Proverbs in generall, is generally acknowledged; but she Author, as David of the Pfalmes, not because all made by him; but because either the maker of a good part; or collector and approver of the rest. It is not to be doubted but that many of these Proverbs and Sentences, were known and used long before Solomom: so wise and understanding a Nation could not be without many pithy common sayings and sentences, which are accounted the best evidence of every Nations wisdome; and though it might have many more than Solomon (guided by the Spirit of God) did think fit to Canonize, by admitting them into his Collection ; yet that he would admit of none, is not a thing likely. Of them that were collected by others, as Solomous, but long fince his death, from Chapter 25, to 30, and then of those that bear Agurs Name, Chapter 30, and Lemucls, Chapter 31. see upon those severall Chapters. If not all Solomons, then but partly his, and partly collected by him, and partly by others, at severall times: no wonder, if divers things with little or no alteration, be often repeated. However, Solomon might have some end in it, in repeating some things of purpose. We shall finde repetitions in that kind in the writing t of some ancients. Sed quia nimis indociles quidant, tardique sunt, admonendi videnturlæpius; faith one of them. Dicentibus; Quousque cadem? Responde: Ego debeo dicere; Quousque eadem peccabitis? Remedia ante vultis, quam vitia definere? Ego verò magis dicam; & quia recufatis, per-

A third thing very necessary to be observed, is, That there be few moral maximes or sentences of such catholick and universal truth, (which is the priviledge of Mathematical Theoremes) as to hold alwayes : or that the contrary should never be true. The reason whereof is well showed by Aristotle in his Ethicks. If you will have it in the words of an ancient Grammarian, that hath written upon Virgil: Scottent a non-lemper generales funt, sed interdum pro negotiorum qualitate formantur. As for example; Differ, habent parvæ commoda magna moræ, A little delar may prove a great advantage; faith one. Semper nocuit d'fferre paratis: Delayes are alwayes dangerous; faith another, Both may be true, as the matter may be stated by different circumstances of time, place, and the like. So our Saviour in the Goffel; He that is not with me, is against me; in one place, Matth. 12, 30, And, He that is not against us, is for us, in another, Luke 9. 50. And Solomon himself, in the same place, Answer not a fool according to his folly: And, Answer a fool according to his folly, Prov. 26. 4, 5.

As for the word Proverbs, of the several uses and notions of it, and how here to be understood, see upon the first verse of the first Chapter.

I Kings 4.32. we find among ft other things recorded of Solomon, as an feet of his extraordinary Divine wisdom, (verse 29.) that he spake 3000. Proverbs, (not four thousand, as I find in some English Bibles, printed at London, 1620.) part of which, so many as the Holy Ghost thought sit for Canonical Scripture, are contained in this Book of Proverbs, and Ecclesiastes; and some perhaps in the Canticles. It is not unlikely, that many of the rest are to be found in Eccle fiafficus: which by fome ancients is attributed to Solomon, not onely because written in imitation, as one of the Prologues there doth acknowledge; but also because parely taken out of this Book of Proverbs, as may appear by the Paralel collected and exhibited by Cornellius a Lapide in his Prolegomena sponthis Book: and partly (as in all likelihood) out of the remainder of those 3000. before spoken of. This Ecclesiasticus, or Author of the Book we commonly call Ecclefialticus, which was written in Hebrew; and afterwards transfined into Greek; lived some 500, years after Solomon, and some 250, before Christ, in the dayes of Ptolemeus Philadelphus; by whose procurement the Hebrew Bible was first translated into Greek, by those we commonly call the Septingint : and it is thought by some learned men, that the Author of the Book (one Jelus Sirach:) was one of these Septuagint Interpreters. The reading of Ecelefiasticus, and diligent comparing of paralel places, will give light to many obscure places of the Proverbs; which hath made me the more willingly to take natice of the Book. It hath been the opinion of some, as appeareth by the Questiones Hebraica, ascribed commonly to Saint Jetome, that all those 3000, before mentioned Proverbs, were comprehended in this Book of Proverbs. The words out of the fand Book whoever be the Author of it) to this purpose cited by Cornelius a Lapide, are ; In Proverbiis versus nongenti quindecim continentur: in quibus etiam continentur tria mille parabola.

The Ancients indeed were wont to divide all Books into verses, and by the number of verses to estimate their bulk and bignesse; of which much hath been written by latter Criticks. But how 3000, parables can be contained in 919, verses, (taking verses for lines, as they did;) I cannot imagine; but rather believe there is an errour in the Copy. But if not in the Copy; yet, however, an errour in the man, certainly, if ever any did so believe, or writes

CHAP. I.

He Proverbs] Hebr. | WD or, in constructions as here, 1 WD. The word is derived from a verb, that hath two fignifications; both which may have relation to Proverbs, or Sentences. The first fignification is, dominatus eft; dominum exercuit: that is, be hath been Lord, ruler; or governour. that is, be hath been Linus, inch.
Hence Sentences might be denominated, as among the Grecians, of the partition of the likethereby to fet out the worth and dignity of moral Sentences and Apophthegms, tending to instruction, and direction, in matter of life and manners as among all other tub jets deferving the preeminence; fo also among all men, to passe with authority and without control. This is the common opinion; which I am not against. But it may be as probable, that Sentences were at first so called, from the ranck and place of the authors themselves. For in ancient times (whereof fomewhat hath been faid in the Preface:) they were for the most part Governours, or fuch at leaft, as were thought fit to govern, whose fayings were received for Sentences. Whence it is, as . conwinner tayings were tentured to sentences. Whence it is as conceive, that sentences, in general 3 or more particularly, choice Senences, are called DIDD Chap, 8.6. that is, Princes; properly; and 22, 20. DID To magnates: tribun; that is, Great men, or Chief Officers: as we shall say there. See also upon Chap. 16. 10. A Divine Sentence is in the lips of the King, &c. And Quintilian,an ancient Master of Rhetorick, one of the most judicious that ever wrote; where he treats of Sentences, faith well: Magis enim decet eos in quibus eft aufforitat, ut rei pondus etiam persona confirmet. Quis ent in usions of ancorties, at ret ponaise cream persona confirmet. Sun enim ferat, puerum, aut adolescentulum, aut eriam ignobilem, &c. that is, It becomes them best (to use Sentences:) that are men in or of authority, that the dignity of the person also may adde some further weight to the matter. For who would endure a child, or a youth, or some obscure mean fellow, to pronounce sentences in his ordinary talk, and to take upmean fellow, to pronounce functiones in his admary fally, and to take up-pon him the authority of an Infrutiers or Teacher? The Greccians allo-called Sentence; you just, quote fimiles fun confilis, (1 think he meant feitirs for fo is the word you just just decretiss: as the fame Onjinitian. Certain its, that anciently many were the au-thors of Sentences, who also were of Laws: Hi non in Joso, need the confidence of the confidence of the confidence of the con-traction of the confidence of t consultorum atrio, fed in Pythagone tacito illo sanstoque secciju, didi-ceruni jura, que forenti une Sicilia, & per Italiam Gracia ponerent ; cerunt jura, que fiorant tune sitifie, é) per Italium Gracia ponerent faith Senecas, fuelaking e(fome ancient Law-makers, The fectoral fignification of the web 1000 (but in another conjugation:) is Similio fastive of and (in Hibbil), as they call it;) comparavir, affinitative rata is, He max made like; Me did liker, or comparavir, affinitative rata is, He max made like; Me did liker, or comparavir, of the conceive that the propensinginification of 1000 or more received that they are the consistency of the control of the contr most Parables end in Proverbs, or Proverbial Sentences, and admonitions; therefore, say they, the word came to be used for Proverbs, and Sentences: first, for such as were expressed figuratively : then, and sentences: next, for them as were expected figuratively: then, afterwards more generally, for all manner of fentences, or moral precepts, though (for the language) never to plain and direct, But I will not further enquire into the reasons: certain it is, that both here and elsewhere in Scripture, the word mashal is so taken : not for a Proverb, properly so called, which implyes a common speech, sententious, with somewhat extraordinary (according to speech, jencentous, with nonewing extraordinary (accounting to the propriety of every Language, fome affecting rimes; fome, allulons; and others, fome other thing) in the expression; but also any moral precept, instruction, or observation; such as are many in this book, which beareth the title of irvoverbs. However, it was the contraction of the contr doth not follow, that because of the Inscription, every thing in the book, should be Proverbs: since it is ordinary enough to make inferiptions a majore parte. The first nine Chapters are by many accounted rather as an Introduction to the whole book, than as part of the Proverbs, Indeed they do not contain many Proverbs, but the praises and commendation of wildom, in general : that is the subject; whereof fee what hath allready been faid in the Preface And upon Chap. 10. ver. 1. The Proverbs, &c. From the tenth Chapter to the end, there is little else but Proverbs and Sentences, Again there be, who think these first nine Chapters to be here exhibited as they came from Solomon, himfelf, without any alteration of either matter or method : but those that follow, to be collections: of which more shall be said in due place. Others, with more pro-bability, that the six first verses of this Chapter, are not Solomons, but added by way of Preface or Argument by them that made this collection, and fer it out abroad. This, as of it felf it is not improbable, because the like we know hath been done to many Books; yet anie, pocauie ine ine we want in internation to many broosty it in might as well have been spared, there being as much and more probability for the contrary. For that Solomon himself should peth, his name and titles himself, is very suitable to the custome of those ancient times. There be few books, of any great antiquity, whether in verfe or profe, but begin with the Authors name, his country, and pedigree, and other like circumstances; and this by the Author himfelf, as all men agree. It is commonly interpreted by them that are well verfed in ancient books as a mark of great antiquity; if it be genuine, and not suppositious, or counterfeit. But now for con-clusion of all we have more to say upon this Title, before we leave tit, the confideration of titles being a principal thing in all exposi-tions: We may reduce the several uses and significations of this word TUD (as it relateth unto Proverbs:) to the feveral properties and conditions belonging to a Proverb. Which though they be not found but in few Proverbs, all : yet all belong unto Pro verbs, in general; as appears by them that have written of the verbs, in general; as appears by them that have written of the nature and conflictation of a Proverb; which also might be shewed, (as by them it is, who proiessed by treat about it;) by diversexamples. A Proverb them we say, is an ancient speech (the more it hath of antiquity, the more of lufter and authority:) commonly used (that too, addeth to the authority : and the Greek παχοιμία, for a Proverb, imports properly, a cammon way, speech, or admonition: from which some fetch the Latine word, adagium, too:) which for the most part, hath somewhat of acutnesse, obfeurity, or concinnity in it, more than other speeches; whose end is, instruction, or information, in point of life and conversation Now we shall find, that what hath some of these qualifications and conditions; yea though but one of them, if norably and eminently, is in the Scripture ealled, WD a Proverb. So, for example: Wickednesse proceedes from the wicked: אַנוֹ שׁמַשׁים אַנִּין אַנְאָנוֹ זְעָשִׁים זוּ Sam. 24. 13. a very plain speech, which might seems the interpretation of a Proverb: (as, care DO 1833 Limits terms the interpretation of a Proverb: (as, Cas the Ethippan change his skin, or the Leopard his plays?] cr. 32. But eye a proverb, and fo called there than a proverbit felf. But eye a proverb, and fo called there becaule an ancient common speech? At faith the Proverb of the ancients, Wickedneffle proceeded, &c. Gather the pieces, &c. unto the 12. verse. There is nothing in all this, that is properly proverbial, as the word is more commonly used: but as t is a similitude , darkly and obscurely fet out; that intitles ic is a fimilitied, darkly and obtentive to the same it to this appellation of a proverb. I will open my mouth in a perable: I will utter dark fayings of old. In the whole Plaimo there is not any thing properly proverbial, or fententious: no, nor very obscure, and allegorical: but a plaine historical narration, or commemoration of things that had passed in old times, between God, and their fore-fathers, in Egypt and elsewhere, fince their coming out of Egypt, where the power, and constant goodnesse of God towards them; and their as constant unthankfulnesse, and manifold provocations, are manifested and declared. Why then a proverb, or a parable? or, why riddles? For fo the Original word (TITIT) which in our English is rendred dark fayings, doth properly import.

First, because of the argument: ancient things, very old, and Firth, because of the argument: ancient things very ods, and very frange: and in that partaking of the jumer, as ofprearby, so of riddles. We have shewed the extent of the Hebrew word, as it is used in the Scripture. Now what a Proverb is properly in its own nature; and how to be diffinguished from a paralle, or femente: or applied me how from an applagae: a riddle, &c. because I thing it not fo necessary here and would put us to much applagae in go decembe it: I must referre the Reader that defires to decembe it: I must referre the Reader that defires to be fatisfied, to them that have written of that subject, of purpose: but to Aristorie especially, where before quoted, in whom much good matter to this purpose will be found. As more thort, so more pertinent it may be, to take notice, that as the Hebrew 707 is used in the Scripture of divers speeches that are not Proverbs in the common fense and use of the word fo the Greek word yeio : griphas : (properly, a riddle :) is fourtimestaken more generally, for any question, or probleme, though it have nothing in it, either of wit, or obscurity. See in the tentil Book of Athenaus, by Clearchus &c. as by the learned that have taken paines upon that Author, is well obferved. The Proverbs of Solomon] Hebr. משלי שלמדו I am not ve

No proper Name there almost, (at least, of any note:) but hath its allusion, or mystery. Abraham : Isaac : Facob, &cc who knowes it not? Why then may not we observe, (though I finde it not observed:) that TWD massed, a Proverb: and שרטוש Solomon: by transposition (wherein consists all anagrammatifme:) onely of one letter, is but one word? And there be many fuch transpositions of letters in the Scripture, not in allusions, and etymologies onely; but even in the same word althons, and explosions to be found. So that if we make a verbal of 700 the verbe; the same word may stand for Solomon, and for a specific of Proverb, But I shall not further insist upon this. V. 2. To know wifdom and instruction, to perceive the words of w. 2. 20 glow wywim and instruction, to perceive the words of madessanding 1 Solomonby these, and many other words, heaped in the 5, 4, 5. and fixt following verses, tells his Reader what the end is of this Book, and what benefit he may reap by reading of it. The world is, and hath been of old, (though never more than now) full of Writers, and as full of Readers : but variety, or curiofity being the onely end of most, the world were better without them. An ancient Grammarian in Aulus Gellius, when fome professed Philosophers came to him, being a man of great account in his profession, to be resolved about some curiosities in matter of language, brake out into a great passion; Ego Grammaticus, vita arque morum disciplinas quaro: vos philosophi, &c. 1 that am a professed Grammarian, now in mine old age, am wholly set upon those Arts and Studies by which my life and manners may be benefited: and you professed Philosophers, (mera estimate thatia Glossaria:) are wholly turned into dead and rotten Glosfaries (or curiofities about words and phrases, from which no benefit can accrue, either to you, or to any body elfe, in point of life or action) it made him with, that rather all men had been borne dumb, than that there should be so much ado about words. As therefore the consideration of the end, before hand, in all actions and undertakings, do extremly become a rational wife man; fo. if feriously thought upon, is there no end much considerable, that hath not reference to this end, here spoken of, To know wisdom, &c. that is, to the improvement of man in his better part, in matter of life and action. And this was the way that the ancients did use to teach wisdom; as before in the Preface hath been observed, by Proverbs, and Parables, and Sentences; such as this Book doth contain. Which way in those ancient times was found so effectual, that some in later ages, did not onely prefer it before any other way, but would admit of no other, as expedient. Concerning which, Seneca hath two Epistles, wherein the matter is argued on both fides very Jargely, and learnedly. But here a question, not impertinently, as I conceive, may be moved; whether the Law and the Commandements, comprehended in the five Books of Moles, were not fufficient to that end. without these Proverbs of Solomon. For that that was the end of the Law also, appears by many pallages: as by Deut. 4. 5, 6. Rehold I have taught you Statutes and ludgements, &c. Keep therefore and do them; for this is your wisdom Judgements, occ. Acep toretypic annawisens, you wan a your nethod and your underflanding in the fight of the nations, which full heast all thele flatutes, and fay; Surchy this great nation is a wife and underflanding tople. For what nation, &c. To this, our answer is, First, that the end of the Law, was, to instruct men in those things, that did more immediately belong to the service of God; as also in matters of right and wrong, which come within the compasse of Laws and publick administration of justice. Other precepts of morality and good manners, were rather fet out in types, partly; and partly, in examples of the Law, than in expresse terms, most of them. However, the effect of most of them might be deducted out of the Law, by them that were very well versed in it, and applyed themselves earneitly to the study of it: and many questioniesse of these very Proverbs, here commended unto us by Solomon, as tending to this end, to wisdom and instruction, &. were then extant and in use among the Hebrews, being transmitted from fathers to children, by them that were wife themselves, and careful of their childrens education, Thus was the Law, with those other helps that God had provided for them, very fufficient to make them wife and perfect, that carefully fought after wildom, according to that degree of knowledge and perfection, which God, in his heavenly wildom, had allotted to that infant-age of the Church. Afterwards, when God was pleased that morall wisdome should be more Popular and common, he raifed Solomon to that end and purpose, who not onely collected into one, what former ages afforded in that kind ; but himself, being endowed by God with extraordinary wiffpired by God. These words therefore, To know wisdom, &c. must not be taken in opposition to the Law, as of a different way here proposed : but upon a supposition of those means, the Law, the propoled but upon a luppointion or those means, the Law, the Plains or whatever elfe God had already provided unto that end, See more upon ver. 4. To give fibility, 8c, and ver. 3. My fin, 8c, To leave wifdom adiptrading, to precive the words of underflanding, 2. To receive the influedion of wifdom, 8c.] Here many words put together in these, and some following verses, some of which in common the sac equivalence of cheenife, alled 6c which in common the sac equivalence of cheenife, alled 6c. of which in common use, are equivalent; (otherwise called fiof whiten in common the, are equivalent; (ornerwise cause ji-nonima's) and others, that are of very neer fignification. Neverthe-lesse, it were no hard thing to devile some distrence, might we but take the liberty to look into the divisions of subtile Philosophers, concerning the manifold habits and faculties of the foul; as either into Aristotle, concerning the differences of those five habits ether into Kintotte, concerning me amerines or those nve nabits, as he reckons them, of the foll, right, swiftin, ordinate, or as easily perswade our selves, that colomon writing these things for common use, and even where he invites common people to him, could think it fit and scasonable, to tye himself to such philosophical niceties in his expressions; which though they may have some ground in nature, yet are fo remote from common apprehensions, that but very few are capable of them. To let therefore all curious diffinctions paffe, as rather the conceits of Interpreters, than any part of Solomons, or the Holy Ghosts meaning; that which we conceive most probable, is, that by so many words, persect or true wildom is intended, which presupposeth a competency of light in the understanding, (as the foun action;) concerning things divine and humane; and a conformity of the will and affections to that light. Variety of words doth the better fet out the excellency of this wildom; and serves also to make the deeper impression in the mind of the Reader. Yet for all this we deny not, but that according to the propriety of the words, 170711 may referre to speculative knowledge and sciences, more particularly : רנוח to pra-Rical abilities, which we call prudence and discretion; as 7010 doth import discipline properly, that is, such improvements of knowledge and manners, as comes by inflitution, and good education of wifdom] We may note, that the word i Dom in Scripture, is a very general word, and comprehends all kind of wildom: as the word σοφία, in Greek Authors. Sometimes, it doth import mechanick craft and wildom: which though of an inretior degree, yet is from God too, as we are taught, Exod. 28.3.31.3. and Efay 8.23.24. unto the end, Sometimes, worldly wildome, whether practicall, which we call policy, with the control of the cont prudeuce: or speculative, as the knowledge of things natuprudéuce: or locculature, as the knowledge or things natural, &c. as tkings 4, 30. And laftly, beavenly fanditying wildome: as Deuteron, 4.6. See Job 18, 38, and Pfalm 111, laft verfe: of which fee more on the feventh yetfe of this Chapter. All these kinds as they are all from God, so they may all concurre and meet in some one man. One and the fame man may excell in mechanick craft; whether by practice, lame min may excell in mecnanick craft; whether by practice, and actual operation: or by flewing his ready phancy, quick apprehension, and sound judgement in all such things; and my be very prudent and cautelous in worldy things; both at home, and abroad; and besides all this, a very godly man too. But though this be not impossible, yet it doth not often fo fall out: except a man (as fome are) be naturally, wife and politick. But they that attain to worldly wildom by long use and practice, and diligent observation; (which is the more ordinary way) they are such commonly as make it their onely end, and businesse, in this world: who propose to themselves worldly ends, and atchivements, as chiefest happinesse. Whereas, they that have a right apprehension of the vanity of this world, and all worldly selicity; and can make a difference between things momentaneous, and eternal; and have a faith answerable to their judgement, by which things future appear unto them with equal certainty as things present; it is not very likely, or very possible (excepting, as before:) that such men should be very worldly-wife and prudent: not because they are incapable; but because being so intent upon the profecution of heaven, (that precious pearl :) they cannot afford unto fuch things which they have no better opinion of, so much time and tendence, as they require : it being very difficult, if not impossible, even in this sense. to serve two masters, God and the world : to apply himself effectually to the pursuance of worldly defignes and advancements; and to the purchase of heaven and eternity. Aristotle makes it, among others the property of a μεραλά ψυχ , or truely magnanimous man, never to he feen very earnest or eager about any thing; and particularly never to speak, or to walk hastily: because, saith he, this world doth not afford any thing, that he doth fo much value, as to put himself out of his ordinary pace, or to raise his voice for it. For what should he think much considerable in the world, to whom life it felf is not a confiderable thing ? So he, How much more doth a true Christian, whom thoughts of eternity have once throughly possest, think the study and earnest pursuit of these kind, but himself, being endowed by God with extraordinary wildon, added many particular instructions of his own, as he was inlear afterwards) though a man doth not for his heart upon the world, or make it his titley to be worthly while yet (lome natural towardlinefle that way prefupposed) he may much advantage himself even fo (in worldly wildom, I mean) by the diliegent reading of the word of God; and especially, by being well versed in this book of Proverbs.

V. 4. To give fubrilly to the fimple, to the young man knowledge and discretion | David faith the same of the Law of God, before this Book of Proverbs was extant, Pfal. 19. 7. John Investibly commandements hast made me wifer, &c, whereby that is confirmed which we faid before, that these commendations we have here of the Proverbs, and those effects that are ascribed unto them, do presuppose, or include a knowledged of the Law likewise.

an presuppote, or meture a knowledged of the Law likewile, [hittly] The Original word To'D) her translated [hittly, [hittly]] The Original word To'D) her translated [hittly, [hittly]] The bed the formation of the formation in the Scriptor Though it be deficed, and much commended, I hear by them Though it be deficed, and much commended, I hear by them Inough it be deniese, and much commended, a near by them that must have pernarifum tibum; and would not willingly be put to the labour of turning more Bookes than one (for that they cannot, through ignorance, were too großle to fleet), yet I cannot perlwade my felf that it is fit to be done, or indeed, profitabe to any, to transcribe, upon every word whole Concordances and Dictionaries. So a man may be long enough, and yet take no very great paines. My observation upon the word is: That whereas there is nothing more natural unto man (as Philosophers observe, and we partly know by the fad Story of Adam's fall:) than the defire of knowledge: and among the men of the world, (that is, the greater part,) no kind of knowledge more valued, or defired, than craft and subtilty : therefore wise Solomon doth here most wisely multiply words, as subilly, knowledge, discretion learning: and before, wisdome, instruction, understanding, and the like, the more powerfully to draw and to perswade, if possible, all kind of men, to the love and pursuite of hea venly wisdome: being very confident himselfe, (and would have all men to believe, as by this accumulation of words he nave ail men to believe, as by this accumulation of words he doth intimate:) that heavenly wildome, is the wildome of wildomes: and heavenly knowledge (that is godlindle, wildome) of others, wild arealy, infome degree, may by this Book improve themselves, and increase their learning. In which words therefore all titles, attributes, and experiments of wildome and the liber of the state of the knowledge, as subtility prudence, differeion, and the like, in request among men; do properly belong. Which may be the comfort of every true Christian, that knoweth God in Christ, comnort or every true Chrimian, that knowth God in Christ, fineerely, and experimentaly; that though perchance he know-the little elfe, yet he knoweth as much as will make him eternally happy; in comparison of which all other knowledge sternariy nappy; in comparition or writen attorier knowledge is inconfiderable and of little worth. See also upon Chap. 8.12 prudenee. But this not to undervalue any kind of humane knowledge, or learning, which may be ufefull unto men; than which nothing (no worldly thing) is, or should be more honorable among men: much less that part of human knowledge, which doth very much conduce to the better understanding of the word of God, upon which true faith is grounded; confuting and confounding of errors and herefies, fallely pretending to the faid word: without which help of humane knowledge and learning, there would be great confusion in the world; atheisme and superstition greatly prevaile: nor yet to conclude from these words, that all kind of knowledge must be had from the Scriptures, all learning thence to be derived; which some blind zealots, and enthufiasts would have: to none of thele ends; God forbid; but to give heavenly knowledge her due; and the better to understand, why here expressed by so many words. See also upon Chap, 2, verse 9. and judgement.

to the simple] By simple, the foolish and ignorant, such as want knowledge, and instruction, are commonly understood, as by the annotation upon the beginning of the verse may be gathered. But the word will beare another interpretation also, which may be as proper to the place, as the former: Simplicity, is sometimes taken for integrity, and sincerity of actions opposed to fraud and hypocrisic. Without this simplicity; or at least, except a man apply himselfe to it; he can reape little benefit by reading. A corrupt life, and a corrupt judgenette orient sy reasons, a corrupt ine, and a corrupt lunge-ment, go commonly together. See more upon Pfalm 1, ver, 16. For glory belongs unto God onely; and he will not give but glory unto another, Ifa. 42. 8. Of this fence of the word fimple, and of interpretation grounded upon it, fee more upon the next words, to the young man] The word TUI though more commonly to the young man 1-11 to word 1-2 troops, above commonly it fightifies a youth, or young man; and because young men are most fit for service, a fervant allot yet some make it most proper to a childle in the womb, tipe and ready to be finded off; that is, to be borne; and to they would have it taken, J. V. S. A wise man will hear, and will increase learning] Because the young , and the simple were particularly mentioned in the foregoing verse; to whom also the word of infinition, in the former, might be thought to have more particular relation; left any should think the use of this Book to belong unto such onely, he presently addes concerning those that have already attained to wants, (which is the case of them that are most perfect in this world) will despise no means, no oppertunity to improve him-felfe. Whereas a foole, (that is, one that thinks himself wise) because he thinks he knows all things better than any man car tell him; as he is not follicitous to feek the means of himfelf, fo if good counsel be given him by others, he hath not the patience to hear; or if he must hear, yet it goes no further than his ears, and doth not enter into his heart, because of his frowardness and selfe-conceit. It is the propriety of a wife man, absolutely to despise no man, though never so mean, or simple otherwise; becaule there is no man fo simple, but may speak to the purpose fometimes; according to that ancient faying, Sepe etiam elf olim valde opportuna locutus. But though it may fo fall out fometimes; yet generally no men are more honoured, either living, or dead, than they that are able to good counfel: In Homer, Agamemnon the King being ongaged in a troublefome war, without that he had but ten fuch counfellors as

Chap. i. the most plausible, and truest sense (though I have not found it in others) of the words; grounded, in part, upon the propriety of the Hebr, word אוור which comes from מוובל a pilor: and doth most properly and immediately import (artem nauticam, de felertiam illam,qua gubernator in nave regenda utitur, faith Mercer :) that skil and dexterity which belongeth to a good Pilot. And what that is, who knows not? And accordingly, the LXX, here tradilate it zu-Sipmon, and the vulgar Latin, gubernanda. The Chaldee Para-phrase also, should say, if the Latin translation of it were altogether to be trufted where we find it gubernaculum. But the truth is, the Chaldee word imports no more than folertiam, or prudentiam : or the Chaines word imports no more train jointian, or pagentam; of at the most, prudentem gubernationem, in general: which I think can-not be well rendred by gubernatulum. But this as a caveat by the way only. I wonder therefore, that Mercer. (who is followed by most Interpreters) (hould make these words to cohere with the next vers, in fenfe: and a man of understanding shall attain to wife counfels, to understand a Proverb, &c. which is very contrary to this exposition, which we embrace, and have hitherto insisted upon. For so, wife counfels are confined to that intellectual wildom and understanding (more properly called, wit and fubrilry;) which is necessary to the understanding of Proverbs, and Riddles: which we rather interpret of politick wifdom and prudence. (See Ch. 11,14, where no counfel #, &c. It is the fame word there ; which doth much confirm our interpretation of it here,) That which hath moved them to it, as I conceive, because they do not see, what this infinitive to understand, &c. can otherwise depend upon. As for the former infinitives, To know wildom, &c. they make them to depend of the first verse: The Proverbs of Solomon, &c. To know wifdom, &c. that is: The use and end whereof is, to teach wildom, &c. But here, the coherence seems to be interrupted by the fifth verse, A wife man, &c. which therefore they fetch from these words. But besides that generally, and in this book of Proverbs peculiarly in which all things are so loose, to argue from the coherence, is no very good argument : it may be anlivered that there is no inconvenience at all, if we fetch the coherence, though somewhat interrupted by the fifth verse, from the first, according to the tenor and construction of the former verses: which kind of interruptions are frequent enough in other books; and may be helped, if need be, by a parenthalis. The Arabick translation turns all those infinitives into imperatives. Indeed, in the Greek, it is very usual, in this way of 'precepts, to use infinitives for imparatives. But that it is so in the Hebrew too, especially when the infinitive is turned into a gerund, is more than I can pleasure to be reaped, of a quier calme life; pleasure being the thing, which he proposed to himself, as his onely selicity. If therefore neither fine sayings and sentences: nor some outward performances, suitable to those sayings, could (even in the judgement of heathens) make Epicurus to be well thought of; judgement of heatnens,) make appearus to be west thought of but contratiwise, his name and his memory was, generally, in horror and detellation among them, because of his principles? how much less is the shew and outward practice of any vertue, and the pollession of any knowledge, that is not grounded upon religion, and the feare of the Lord, to be regarded in any that profelle Christianity? See also upon Chap. 3, 3, mercy and truth. But let us not mittake in words, Religion, and the fear of the Lord, with most men at this day, is on, and the few of the action, which most men at this day, is taken for opinion, phansie, considence, zealous words; yea certain tones, faces, gestures, and the like. Let a man be never so religious in his life and conversation, and sound in his faith, that hath not these markes; he is hone of the godly. God keep fober men from fuch delufions.

V. 6. To understand a Proverb, and the interpretation] Of the coherence, fee upon the former words. The folution of riddles, and dark Savings, though sometimes rather an effect of wir, in general, than a necessary consequent of true wisdom, is here mentioned among other particulars because it was a thing in ancient times not among the Jews only, as appears by divers Scripture stories; but among the Grecians and all Oriental people, much practiced, and in great request, as is testified by divers ancient Authors. This is further explained, and fer out by the Author of Ecclefiasticus, (of whom, fee what is faid in the Preface in these words; But he that giveth his mind to the law of the most High, and is occupied in the meditation thereof, will seek out the wisdom of all the ancients, &c. Chap. 39.

V. 7. The fear of the Lord, is the beginning of knowledg] See the places quoted in the margin of the Bible, Job 28 28. & plal. x11. 10. & Ch. g. to, & the Annot, upon Pf, 111 10. The fear of the Lord, And upon Pfal, 130, 4, that thou mayft be feared. Except then this foundation of the fear of the Lord, (or piety and religion) be had all other wisdom, is but folly; yea more dangerous and pernicious in the consequent, than meer folly and simplicity. Ancient heathen Philosophers dispute at large, that non est virtue sui non constat ratio, Let a man be never so liberal, just, or temperat, in his actions, if he be so rather by an instinct of nature, propriety of bodily temperam entum? or by the power of good education, habituated into custom: than upon any ground of reason, and judgement, they will not althan upon any ground of teach, and judgement, they will not al-low him truely to be liberal, just, or temperate. Nay Plato goes fo far, that if a man doth perform such things, such actions of justice, &c. upon grounds of reason, as he doth think, and believe: wet except his judgement be so well grounded and setled, that he be out of all danger of a relapse, that is, of contrary impresflows, (a thing often feen, in the changes and revolutions of flates and times, according to which the minds and opinions of light ungrounded men are apt to turne, and fill to be confident that they are in the right:) upon any occasion; he will not allow him truly to be just, or any thing elfe that pretends to folid vertue. It cannot be denyed but Epicurus himfelf was the Author of as many excellent fayings and fentences, as most Philosophers before him, or fince; nay and lived too, in fome degree accordingly: though not as some would make us believe, who whilest they endeavour to make a Saint of him (a thing not much to be wondered in such an Age of Saints, such as they are !) rake the liberty to live like right Epicures themselves : but lived, I say, in some degree, according to his own precepts and lentences.

the beginning] Although TOWT here is expounded by divers. as Plalm III. 10. The fear of the Lord, &c, to which we have already referred: to wir, for excellency and perfection; yet because Solomon afterwards, Chap, 9, verse 10, doth seeme to expound himselfe, using there the word 1971, which properly fignifies beginning, and is not found in that other fenle, as 10007 is, therefore it is more plausible to keep to it, here also. But whereas some Expositors make a doubt concerning this feare of the Lord; whether to be understood of filial, or fervil fear: I should rather question the warrantnlad, or forus teat: 1 mount rather question the wayrant-ableneft of that distinction, (though ancient enough, I know 2) if we might be so long, as to discuse it, and search it to the bottome. We have done it essewhere; and here; if by the feare of the Lord we understand Religion, and the worship of God in general; (as Pfalm 130. 4. But there is for-givenesse with thee, &c. which I think is most proper to this place : See the Annotations there;) there is no great need but fooles despife] The Original word 7118 doth not onely figuific a foole, limply; but a stubborne, strong-headed, self-conceited, incorrigble soole: as by comparing of places may easily appear. Now if with the LXX, we may translate it here, a of appear. Now with the LAA, we may transfer a nece, a or being that it is upgaly men; then the fend (and coherence) will be: The fear of the Lord, (that is, goddinefie and religion:) is true wildom: and if goddinefie be true wildom indeed, it must need follow that they that reject or despite the one, reject and delpife the other alfo: that is in effect, That all ungodly mens that will not Submit to the fear of God, are fooles. So, this latter member, is both a confequent, and a confirmation of the former; both tending to one end, to fet out the excellency of the fear of God, or religion. There be many in the world are not afraid. or ashamed, to be accounted irreligious: there be, that glory in or alliamed, to be accounted attengious: tracte De, usat gooy, in it; and think the better of themselves for it. They ary themselves up, and are cryed up by others, for the wite of the times: when farre better, wits without this marke, of being atheistical, are not rarre netter. With without this market of being attention, are not in comparition, regarded. But there be not many in the world, that can so well brook, to be thought unwise: much less fooless and thereupon Solomon grounds his exhortation to piety, by a vering, that the sear of God, is, in very deed, true wit, and will dom; and that they that despite, or reproach, piety and godlinelle, do at the fame time proclame themselves egregious fooles. But taking, 7010, for discipline and chastifement, which seems to be most proper to this place : then the coherence will be this. The fear of the Lord, faith Solomon, is wildom: a great commendatear of the Lord, 19411 Solymon, 18 windom; a great commenda-tion, and very taking, fince all men generally are ambitious of wildom. But there is somewhat that goes along with it, with this sear of the Lord, besides wildom; and without, which, wifthis teal of the Jones believe who are a fine the result of the first makes them hate Religion, when they are told of fuffering. So that by these words Solomon seemes to give a reason, why more men do not apply themselves to godlinesse; even because they cannot endure the instruction, or chastisment of wildom. For so the words may import, by a figure common énough in the Bible: wildow and influtation i. c. the influtetion, or chaliffuent of wifedom, µa3/hux 1 and huxara, Influtation and saftigation, must go together! fuch is the order of God; and Chrift himself, though the Son of God, his natural Son; yet was he not exempted from this Law space we all $9 \times \text{area} \text{ye} \text{sys} \text{def} \text{gas} \text{def} \text{gas} \text{def} \text{gas} \text{def} \text{gas} \text in another world? V. 8. My fon, hear the instruction of thy father, and for sake not the law of thy mother] These words may be understood, either of that in tome degree, according to mis own precepts and enteners.

But this, not in reference to God, or to another world, (or is almostality of the Soul 1) both which, (though not so open-ter the fear of God, is the next duty; (both dutes being comply, the one, as the other:) he denyed; but in reference to the prehended by one word, Pittas, by the Lattine's) and is the first companion.

Chap.i.

Chap. i. command in the second Table of the Decalogue; or they may have more particular reference to Deut, 4. 9. & 6.7. and other like places, where parents are strictly enjoyned to teach the Law, of God to their children, with all possible care and diligence. According to the first interpretation, the obligation of children to parents, is general: they owe respect and reverence to their parents, whether good, or bad; and in worldly civil things, whether at home, or abroad, that are not against the Law of God, perfect obedience: but according to the second interpretation, that properly relates to Gods worship, and religious duties; so the obedience of children, or this command concerning their obedience unto parents, must be understood with a limitation, or restriction : it presupposeth their obedience to the Law of God, concerning the education of their children : from which if the parents swarve, or apostatize, children are not bound to obey them. Most Interpreters, interpret futher and mother here, allegorically, or metaphorically : fome understanding by it, God; fome, God and the Church : others, Solomon himfelt. This they were put to, because they could not find any literal sense, which they could like, or maintain, But how likely it is, that Solomon, in these popular admonitions and exhortations, directed to the fimple, as well as others, would expresse himself so obscurely, or ambiguously; let the understanding Reader judge. I see no reafon at all wity any man should question the literal meaning here, morethan in Saint Pauls words : children, obey your parents in all things, Col. 3. 20. All precepts in this kind, being to be understood with certain limitations, which no man almost is ignorant of ; but not allegorically to be frustrated and avoided He may also call the Law of God, the instruction; or, (as Chap. 6 20.) the com-mandement of his father; and the law of his mother; to endeare it unto him the mo e, and the more strongly to oblige him to the obfervation and proteffion of it, because in matter of laws and religion, men ordinarily do most willingly imbrace whatsoever is ma-Porace Solor, as the Grecians are wont to expresse it; that is, that which they have received from their parents: the laws and religion of their fathers, and fore-fathers. How superstitious and pertinatious men have been in that kind in all Ages, though that which they received from their fathers, were never fo abfurd and falle, anclent Sories, both Ecclefiastical and others, will teach. A great ingagement therefore it is to them that receive the truth from their fethers and mothers, never to apostatize from it, for any temporal loffe or advantage.

the instruction of thy father] St. Paul observeth it, that Honour thy father and thy mother &c. is the first commandement with a promife, Ephel, 6.2. We may here observe, that after the commendation of piety, which Solomon doth begin with; that is, our duty of the solomon doth begin with; ty to God: the next thing he doth infift upon, is the duty of chilfren towards their parents, as most immediately flowing from the former and the very foundation of all other moral duties. In fo much, that the very word eur &Bera, and pietas, is sometimes appro priated to this one duty. And herein the layings of ancient wife heathens, and the dictats of Scripture, do agree. It is furthermore observable, that the second part also of this Book of Proverbs doth fo begin; to wir, at the tenth Chapter, where again the fame in-feription, as at the beginning, It rover bs of Solomon, is prefixed; that even there, 'fay, the very first precept, or sentence, is, concerning the duty of children : A wife fon maketh a glad father, &c So ancient Gnomale gree; who as they are of greatest antiquity, so they agree most with the Scriptures: Ilem Ja Dedr Thua: pello meibu de seis porfice So did once Phocilides begin : though fince, Tome other verfes have been fet before, Pythagora's, his verles, alfo , Sararos per npain Saros, &c. then prefently : Touc Te yordis Tina. 'o Profe writers too: as may appear by Ifoerates his Paranests. Plucarch hath a most excellent passage to this purpose, by which the power of reason grounded upon that remnant of natural light in min, fince Adams fall, and the confent of it (reason I mean, and natural light :) with revelation and religion, may appear. All men, faith he, in all places, that are fober and rational, unanimously, do speak and sing, (alluding to Poets :) that both nature, and the Lawes of men, grounded upon nature, (or, that are not contrary to nature :) after the worthip of God, give the first and chiefest place to parents: and that the most acceptable service that men can do unto God, is a conti-nued course of respect, and service, daily renewed and increased, performed by childr n unto parents. See more, upon Chap. 10. 2. maketh a glad father: out of Plutarch. Lastly, we may observe that not in the Decalogue onely, Honour thy father, &c is the first of the fecond table ; but also in that folemn repetition and confirmation of the moral, or natural law, pronounced on Mount Ebal, with curies against the transgressors; the same precept, (though exprefled there in other termes :) hath the fame rank : Curfed is he that fetteth light by his father, or his mother, Deut. 27. 16.

V. 10. My fan, if finners entife thee, confeat not] Nothing can happen more pernicious to one, who through want of years, or otherwife, is not yet fettled in the wayes of godlinelle and picty, than bad company. Be not deceived : evil communications corrupt good manners, 1 Cor. 15, 33. Saint Paul had it out of an ancient Greek Comick, then extant, called Menander: whereby it appears, what reckoning he made of those ancient Sentences and sayings of wife Heathens. One of them, ancienter than Menander by many years, delivers it with much confidence, that wickednesse (among men) doth chiefely ipring trom this root, even from cvil examples and company. And therefore in some ancient Common-weales, not onely lewd and riotous men were feverely punished themfelves; but also Lawes made for the punishment of them that has was famous to that effect. O Christianity! I may fay: O Reformation ! Christ faith, except our righteousneffe exceed the righteonfnesse of Scribes and Pharifees, we cannot enter into the lingdom of heaven, Math. 5. 20. V. 11. If they fay, Come with us ; let us lay wait for blood, &c.] He doth here, and in the following 12,13,14, verses, by a figure cal led minifis or, p. ofopopera, represent them speaking, and using their inticements, or rather inchantments, to pervert a young man from the right way, and to draw him into their nets : not that we flould think that they use these very words, (neither indeed do they use one kind of bait alwayes, but can fit it to feveral tempers and difpolitions, and other circumstances of place and time, and the like) but that from these words in general, we should understand with what boldnefle and impudency, such use to infinuate themselves, under pretence of love, and plausible hopes and atchievements: when nothing but hell and destruction, both of boly and foul, is in all their wayes. Neither are the words, here used, fo to be taken, as words of intifement properly, but rather as words of aggravation: as when he makes them say, Let us lay mait for blood; Let us lurk privily for the innocent without a cault, &c. his meaning is not that they use those, or any like: they are too subtile and cunning, to set out so plainly the horror of their wickednesse and villany; this were not to entice, but deter : not that his meaning therefore; but this, that when they use other language, which doth extenuate the wickednelle of their practice, (as what is so abominable, but may cunningly be extenuated, and made, it not plausible, yet tolerable, or excusable?) they must (by them that are wife and rational) be understood as though they plainly faid. Let us wait for blood : let us lurk privily for the innocent without caufe, &c. But of all bad examples and illaudible courfes, to which a young man may be drawn, why Solomon should pitch upon, and begin with this of bloody theeves and robbers; which may be thought the utmost of wickednesse: a thing not so incidental, neither to any ingenuous nature nor education, as some other vices are : why then with this ? if it be c'sked ; I must confeste I find nothing at all about it in any Commentator : but that which feems to me most probable, is, either that Solomon had a more particular aim and respect to his own times herein, when it may be thought that this practice was more usual and ordinary, even among the better fort in the world : or that he intended here, at the very first, to fet before the eyes of young men, the danger and hor ror of a licentious life, not regulated by the feat of God, and the dichates of a tender conscience: which though it begin not ordina-rily with such extremities, as are here expressed; yet very commonly it proceeds in time to luch, and ends in them, or the like : so that whoever, in his younger years, takes a liberty to lye, to fwear, to pilfer, or to drink, or to frequent lewd company, whether of men or women: any of these, or the like; he may justly suspect himself, that in time, he may prove an arrant cut-throat rogue, such as is here described by Solomon, let us lay wait for blood] Jer. 5, 26. He speaketh not onely of the shedding of blood with the hand, but allo of all crafty practices, which tend to the deriment of our neighbours life, or liveling the state of the deriment of our neighbours life, or liveling the state of the deriment of our neighbours life, or liveling the state of the sta hood, Pfal. 10. 8. & 17. 12. And it is observable, that the very word I which ordinately fignifies blood; doth also in the Chaldee as ordinarily fignific money even as $100 in the Greek tongue, both life, and irvelimed. And Cato, that wife Romon, being asked what it was, fenerari: that is, to give monty to sle; andwered; what it was, fenerari: that is, to give monty to sle; andwered; what it it by slid, or, to murded? But there be many wayes befides that, invented to suck the blood of the poor: the fallacy is, in the difference of words and termes onely. Fures privatorum furtorum in nervo atque in compedibus etatem agunt : fures publici, in aure atque purpura : faid the fame Cato.

for the innocent without rause] Whose words, and how to

thifts, to find fomewhat that may be plaufible, Some devise one thing fome another: but I find nothing in all their devices and inventions, that beareth (with me) the least colour of probability. Can any man be so barbarously wicked, as to propose to himsel the fledding of innocent blood; as it is the blood of an innocent : Or if himfelf by long use, hath attained to that degree of immanity; would he be fuch a tool, as to use these words, as an allurement to them, that are yet raw in fue! practifes? And not to content himfelf nei her to fay innotent, but to infift upon it, as if no other motive more plaufible an I popular, could be found; by adding, without caufe?O but, fay fome innocent and without cauferthat is, we will fall upon such, that never did us any wrong, either in word or deed, and have no occasion at all to suspect us; and so shall we have the better opportunity to accomplift but, defires. Their innocncy, shall be our fecurity. I do not deny, but such thoughts murtherers may have : but that they would express themselves, or Solomon their thoughts in fuch words; who can believe ? Others therefore, they would have this without caufe, to be spoken by these enticers, in reference to the event : wichout caufe, that is fay they, what we do, we will do it fo warily, and cunningly, that we need not fear any ill consequent : though death, ordinarily, (a publick death) any in consequence though seath of the provide for our fecurity well enough. Justice shall have no hold of us. The effect of justice shall be frustrated in us. Or if that will not do, because it takes away only the offence of the words without cause: that is, in effect, of the repetition: and leaves the innecent, the original, as it were, still lyable to the same censure: then, say fome others, (more plaufibly, I confesse, if the words would bear it :) innocent without cause: that is : those men, that truft to their piety and innocency : that think themselves very safe , under the protection of God, whom they pretend to worship: but without cause: it is but a vain confidence. For God (if any God at all) doth not take notice of fuch things : it being by daily experience clearly evident to all men, that the good as foun as the bad; the just, as the un just, are exposed to all manner of mishaps, Folly therefore it is, to stick at these things. This indeed layes well open the very root and soundation of all lewd practices. See Pfalm 10. 11; 13, and Mal. 3. 16. Te have faid, it is vain to ferve God: and what profit is it?&c. and elsewhere; so many places also, Wifdom 2.13 and following verses. And I think probable enough, that such inticers do usually begin there, to postesse their novices, with fuch principles. For till that be done, they cannot go on in their villanies, without fome reluctancie, and remorfe of conscience. And for the words; Davids expression may seem to come somewhat near: Verily I have cleansed my heart in vain, and washed my hands in innocencie. Pfal. 73. 13. To wash his hands in innocentie in vain, is no more than to be innocent in vain; And that the word Dil here translated without cause, may also fignisse, in vain, is not denied. However, let us make the best of it, that can be made : it is but a forced fense , in this place; the other, as more literal, in it felf; fo more natural to the coherence, For all the words, ver. 11,12, manifeftly tend rather to aggravation, fuch as would become a Judge, or a reprover; than to extemuation, such as is ordinary to men of that profession, whereby they endeavour to delude both themselves and others. We therefore flick to our first interpretation It is very ordinary to the Scripture, to fee our wicked men and finners by words as by them, immediately and personally uttered: but rather, indeed, containing, or importing the effect either of their bare thoughts, or of other words spoken by them; in common construction, very different; but in reality of truth, that is ; in confequence of matter, or event; and in Gods interpretation, the very fame. It is a figure of speech persecution . fo that if he should become an idolater in a strange

But more probable; that they are Solomons, the author, his words, taken from the effect, or event of their doings, and therefore nor without cause adscribed unto them; tending to aggravation of their cruelty; thereby the more effectually to deter from their fociety, and fellowship. Of all kinds of death, there is none (naturally) more dreaded, than to be swallowed up quick, or rlive, either by terrible monthers, as Jonas was : or, by the earth it felf, siddenly gaping, and closing again, as Corah and

They that would have these words intended by Solos for the very words used indeed it will not it with we mon, for the very words used by the entieres, are put to many had had some other word here too, which might have fitted both places: it being very probable, that in the expression here, there is some allusion to that which is there recorded The English word there, is pit : and that cannot be here (no more than grave, there,) because by it, the next Hebrew word, 712 fovea is rendred.
The trink is, we have no proper English word for 11NO in this lenle, the Greek .. ave, adus : and the Latins , infernus. Hell indeed we have, for a place of torments: but for a place common to all that are dead, and gone out of this visible world, without any reference (as adves, and infernes, often :) to pain, or pleasure; I know none. I can say therefore, that hell is no proper word, in this place : but where to find a more proper, I know not. As for the word 7180 fo much, by fo many learned, and unlearned, even unto books, and volumes of no small bulk, hath been written of it; as that I rather expect thanks, that I can passe it over so quietly; especially, when there is no need: than reproof, as though I had been willing to spare my paines, to the prejudice of my reader. V. 17. Surely in vain the net is spread in the fight of any bird] About the sense of this, and the following verses, to verse 20, and their coherence, there is no imail controversie among interpreters; among whom (them that have written at large, I mean;) a man shall sooner loose himself in the variety of Exposicions; than find what to stick too, in that variety. If we will content our selves with this translation we have here, and the interpretation which is grounded upon it, it hath as good authority as any other; some principal Rabbins, and Mercerus (the best of all Expositors) his approbation. According to them, this is the lense of the words : As the net is spread in vain; though not in vain, in regard of him that forcad it, who when the bird is caught, hath his end in it; but in vain, in regard of the bird, which might have taken warning by this spreading of the net, as (indeed some do, and avoyd it; accorthis precaming of the next as (nuccer from easy and arroyan; according to that of the Poet: Quaque nimps patent retta, valuat avie;) that (ome evill was intended; but doth not, for the most partiesting diluted by the bait, which it is greedy of, So these, (nor-withflahding the examples of to many that have perished by these unjust courses; and so many gibbers, and gallows, which are set up every where, as nets before the birds, to warn them;) being compelled through their own coverousnesse, & defire of prey; they rush on to destruction as if they had laid wait for their own blood, and lurked for their own lives. This is their exposition; which Gornelius à Lapide alfo after divers others mentioned, though he term it profundiorem Winvolutiorem, that is, the most remote (in fight) and most intricate of all; yet he preferreth before all the rest, as most agrecable to the Greek and Hebrew. For my part, to speak my mind freely, but for the authority of those I have named, it gives me very little content : remote it is, I am fure, and intricate as Cornel. à Lap. judges of it, and may agree with the Greek better than any other: but that it doth so with the Hebrew too, I will not easily grant. The Hebrew words, without any violence or supplement, may be thus alfo translated : Surely without caufe the net it fpread within the fight and it does interpretation, the very same, it is a figure of speech and oranizated: Surely minout cause the new lipread within the light common enough upon other occasions too. So David, Patt if they be the children of made carfed be they before the Lord, for they have driven me out that day, — fepting, 60, stress other Gods. 1 Sam. 26, to this meaning was not, that his enemies had ever used any time words; but that furth was, or might probably be, the effect of their wise, but the first had the most and defined by hird are feetinged. Gods tills the double-feeting and the first had been and defined by hird are feeting to the feeting of the first feeting the feeting of the first feeting of the feeting of that do hurt ! but that is not ordinary ; whence is that of the Coland, the guilt of it should partly lya upon them. We have been mick, Non rete accipiti tenditur neque milvos, Qui male faciunt nothe longer, because the vindication of the right sense In this place, bis. illis qui nil faciunt tenditer : Quia enim in illis fruthis eft ; in illis may give light to, and ferve for many other paffages, of this opera luditur :) without any provocation , or injury, feek to catch birds, that they may eat them : fo these wicked ones spoken of before, lay in wait for the blood of innocent men, that have done them no wrong at all , for meer gain and lucre fake, This translation being so agreeable to the Original; and the Interpretation so proper and literal without any supplement, whereas in the former (that we have here the word own;) is twice to be supplyed, to bring it to that fense they would have : what should make it lesse plaufible, (though not without all authority: for some Rabbines, mentioned by Mercer; be for it:) or probable, 1 know not; except this were it; because it was thought somewhat improper, and perchance ridiculous, that laying in wait for blood, or to speak more expressely, that the murthering of innocent men; should be compared to catching and killing of birds; which feems rather to extenuate the matter; than to aggravate it; yea in some manner, to justifie it; which no man can think could be Solomons mean-30 &c, is used in the history of Corah, &c, if the English word ing. But if this were it, indeed; there was a great mistake, and milappprehension of Solomon his aim. For certainly the words, stome. It is very possible they might, to that also, but chiefly and principally, to the publick Schooles and Synagogues of the Jewes, where the Law of God was daily taught, and expounded, both to if rightly understood, will afford as great an aggravation, as any that is, or can be used, upon that occasion. For what can be said or conceived more horrid of the most Cyclopean men, as Poets call them, than that they should kill men as freely, and with that indifferency, as others kill birds, not out of any malice, or revenge; then first we say with that acute, and of all others, the most scho. but for food, which no man thinks unlawfull (except it be a Py-thagor, an) or makes any confeience of? And so may Pfal. 14, 4. lastical and philosophical Rabbin, Levi Ben, Ghersom: This divisa wisdom, faith he, calls upon all mortal men with a loud voyce, whileft it infuseth it self into their soules, prempting them by certain natural As they eat bread; be understood : that is, they make no more of it than they do, or any man usually doth, to cat a piece of breadinstinds, motions, and propensions, to goodnesse and vertue, and to shun the contrary. These be those natural equal, or apogual, or appara What Solomon doth here expresse under the similitude of birds, is by the Prophet Habakkuk expressed by fisher; in those bitter words of his expostulation with God, in point of providence: and hold-est thy tongue, (faith he) when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous than he. And makest men as the fishes of the Sea, as the creeping things that have no ruler over them : They take up all of them with the angle; they catch them in their net, &c. Hab, I. 13, 14,15. There is another interpretation, which 1 make left recokoning of, than of the two former; yet for the number of Expositors that follow it, not inconfiderable. They refer this, in vain, to the plots and ambushes of these ruffians; to this effect : As men spreadthe nets before the birds in vain, because the birds what by some natural sagacity, what by sormer experience, know well enough how to avoyd it, and to frustrate the expectation of the fowler: So these wicked men, though they hunt after the blood of the innocent never fo greedily, and lay their ambushes never fo cunningly: yet their labour shall be in vain, and their hopes frustrated; because God himself will deliver the innocent and the rightcous out of their snare, and make the mischief which they plotted against others, to fall upon their own heads, so they. There be places of Scripture enow i confeste, to confirm the fense of ne places of ceripture enow i contents, to communications that the train, a Brial 31.6. & 71.6.3 & 8. that God will deliver the righteous, &c., but how probably it may be faid or imposed to be faid by Solomon, that the net (in this fense would have) either before birdsyn men; (in a general fense:) is fpread in vain: and how this will cohere and agree with the 19 verify, concerning men; and with chap, 7.3; a a bird helfed to be finare, &c. let the reader confider. I faid before, they are many, that follow this fenfe; which is all I have to fay for it. There is yet another interpretation of these words, which for the acutenesse. yet another interpretation of their worth, which for the acutenelle of it, not altogether groundlesse. (for else I should not think it worthy of that title) I cannot passe by without some notice. It is Salazars; who, to give him his due, hath done very weil upon the Proverbs, and is the largest that I have seen; but that he takes too much liberty, and is extravagant fometimes. First, he observes, much inerty, and a extravagant omeranes. First, we observed, and showes by divers examples, that unjuft gain is often exprefed or fer out by Solomon, by similitudes taken from birds, and fowling that the most considerable place to that purpose, is Chap, 33, 45. Labour not to be rich, &c. for riches tertainly made them-25. 45. Layon not to be rien, oct. for riens seriamy many them felves wings, and fice away as an Eagle towards heaven. Now the Hebrew here (as the margin hath already told us) is, Surely in stebrew here (as the margin hath aircady toid us) is, Susely in wain the net is spread, in the eyes of every thing that hath a wing. By every thing that hath a wing. young and old; as many as either were studious of it themselves, or took care of their childrens education. But if we take the words more generally, as extending to all men, and nations, in general; as Aciforle calleth them, which all ancient Philosophers have ac-knowledged, concluding thereupon, that all vicious wicked men are damnable, (1 mean it not of eternal damnation, which manyof them were ignorant of) because of the neglect of these first motions and invitations of nature, Ariftotle treats of it at large in his Ethicks, 1. 3. cap 5, and maintains, that though it be not in the power of many wicked men, when gone very far in wickednesse, and habitual sinners, to reclaim and reform themselves; yet for all that, that they are inexcufable and worthy of punishment. As one (faith he. among other things to that purpose) that doth cast a stone, after he hath cast it, the stone is no more in his power; but he might have chosen whether he flould cast it, or no : n ag agana alla, for the beginning, or original power (of casting, or not casting) was in him: Corming, or original boser of two akoyaco, ef abye, the expenses of white feet the even; that is, So of unjust and intemperate; it was in their lower at the beginning, not to be such; and therefore they are wilfully such; at the originating, not to be justify an inversion energy are willfully justify but now that they are become furth, it is no more in their power to be otherwise. Another, in Moral Philosophy, not inferiour to Aristotle; but in point of life, farre above him; but a Heathen too; expresses it thus: It is upon occasion of errour and ignorance that he speaks it; For nature (saith he) had furnished him at fift with certain instincts, notions, and opportunities, by the help whereof he might have attained to the knowledge of truth: which having negle-Eled, hence it is, that he is now not able to difeern that which is falle from creament in Billian of a now not now to anject it that which it time. That Job was a stranger, (an Arabe, or Idumean) no Israelite, and might complain the more, for want of those helps and prerogatives which God had afforded to his chosen people. But the most certain answer is, that that misdom Job speaks of , is not the fame, here intended and described by Solomon. By wisdom there, Job intended especially the wisdom of God in his works, and the ordering of his visible Creatures: fo far manifest and visible to all men, that men may by the confideration of the creatures, understand the power and wildom of the Creature to be infinite; but otherwife, to the wifeft of men fo unscarchable, that there is not the least creature of the world , but is able to pole (in the exact alfo (as Mercer is of opinion) to the feverall wayes of propoling and Philosophical consideration of the nature and proprieties of wildom in fewerall ages, and places. The fool hash said in his beart, &c.) shall be the cause of their utter deftruction, whileft they looking no further than to the prefent, and finding that they do well in their wickednesse, and enjoy themselves with comforts either their judgement is perverted concerning themselves and their action, so that they see not what all the world besides doth fce, and judge of them: or if they know themselves to be wirked yet their heart is hardened through successe, and either seare nothing, perswading themselves that there is no God, or that he doth not see and regard; or desperately conclude with themselves that it is better for them, however, to enjoy present certain comforts, than to bereave themselves of them, for uncertain, whether boats, intan co becase tennetives of them, for uncertainty when the poets of fears. This indeed is the more certain and general cause of the two. For there be many wicked men, that do not prosper in their wickednesse; and yet wicked still : fo that their own prosperity cannot be faid to be the cause. But there would be but little, or no wickednesse at all in the world were it not for the prosperity of some, in all places, and at all times, some; but sometimes, in great number, and then doth wickednesse proportionably increase

II. 11? it will be answered, that there is a double wisdome as practica., (of which Jer. 4. 22. they are wife to de civil but to do good they have no knowledge) fo freculative: to wit, a worldly, and a heavenly wildome. From the wife and prudent therefore; not absolutely, but according to the world; or, according to the flesh; as the Apostle speaketh, and diflinguisheth, 1 Cor. 1. 26. Brethren, ye fee their calling, how not many wife men after the flesh, not many noble, &c. A good answer, I grant; but not so full and satisfactory, as it may be made; For what shall we say of speculative humane knowledge, and learning? Is there no use of it; no advantage, to the attaining of heavenly wildome? yea, very great certainly. There is no question but the consideration of nature, and moral Philois no quention out the connectation to factors, and mothat ripoliphy, effectally, have brought many unto Chilit; have been the more visible meanes, I mean of their convertion; as by ancient learned Fathers, hath been more fully disjuted and demonstrated: who also make the Platonick Phylosophy particularly, to have been a kind of preparation to the Gospel. But here we must again distinguish. There is no kind of humane literature but may further unto piety and godlinest; two things being presupposed. First, that it have some relation unto God, as the authour, or the end; or both, wherein men may observe great variety among ancient Phylosophers and wife men. Some, fo frame their tenets, and whole body of doftrine, what unto moral, or natural; that they ogether either by filence, or direct affertion, excluded God and his worship. Others again, though they had no knowledge of the true God , and his worthip by revelation, no knowledge of the Scriptures; yet by the advantage of their natural light were guided to referre all unto God, and to divine worthip: they will acknowledge him the authour of all goodnesse, happinelle, and vertue: and consequently thought themselves obliged toworship and serve him. The second thing is, humility : I do not mean that humility , that Christians teach : proposed unto us by Christ as the crowne of vertue, but such humility I mean, as wise heathens at all times acknowledged, and commended for a vertue, and a principal help to the acquisition of truth: otherwise by them termed, modesty: which makes a man sensible of his own defects and ignorance; and willing to embrace any meanes offered unto him to benefit himself in the pursuit of truth: opposed unto that vice, or kind of pride (for it is not pride in generall) which they most properly call Sourgerosia: or , felf-conceitednesse. This was Socrates (lo famous and venerable in all ages among heathens: as never was any man be-fore, or after him:) his businesse, and all his Phylosophie tended unto this, to teach men that they knew nothing, as they ought to know; and they leaft, that most took upon themselves. As for himself, all he could brag of, was; that he knew himself to know nothing. Moreover, that all right know-ledge, must be expected from God. Indeed, humane knowledge ledge, must be expectations out, indeed, indust a flowling in the folial fields, is very apt to puffi up; as the Apollte freaketh, I Cor. 8, 7, and when a man is once puffed up, he becomes incapable, as to reality, of wildom, of any further proficiencie. In fuch a cafe, an idiot, a plain tuttlet, hath the advantage of him, otherwise, as I have faid, knowledge, and learning of it felf; is a very great advantage.

V. 6. For the Lord giveth wifdom: out of his mouth cemeth know. ledge and understanding] 1 King 3. 9, Jam. 1.5: This was a very controverted point among the wife heathers, and divers learned treatifes and books (whereof fome yet extant) have been written about it. The Platonifts affirmed, that vertue and wildom, were the gift of God: the stoicks denied it, whence is that horrid blasphemy of Seneca and some others of that profession, that a wife man excelledGod himfelf, becauseGod was good & wife by necessiman excelled on nimeth becaute Go was good & wife by neeffi-y of nature iman, byfree led from See more upon the former words, V. 7. He layeth by found wildom for the rightens! Hebr. Merceus translates is there effen-tium; Janus, guicquid rewera off; that is, whatforwer hath reality of being. Another equivalent word to this (as by fome Rabbins is well observed here) which, also comes from the same radix is U. which word we have, Chap. 8, 21. to the same purpose. as Julftance: of will fill their treasures. The word is there translated by quad eff. that which is a exporaded by h m in his Notes, cand manage anom effe definit; that never endeth. Much might here be laid out of Plato and other ancient Philosophers, concerning the nature and proprieties of true being who bring many arguments to flew, that nothing that is material and visitle; nothing that is temporary, hath a reality of being, or existance, properly, but an appearance onely ; or, at the most, an improper, imperiod quiupperature of the state wont to speak being, of another kind, and quite different from true being; to which purpole, sences, @necunque videmus ac tangin us; and prefently after, (mmailia qualette) fibus ferviunt, que nos accendunt de irritant, negat l'lato ex in effeque were fint. Some Greek Fathers allo (as well as Phylosophers) are very copious upon this fubject, shewing, that no worldly things have that is map it, that implyes reality of life or being: St. Chry. foftom, among others, hath beflowed much of his elequence upon it. How well all this doth agree with the Scriptures, which call GOD, JEHOVAH, as if you should say, HE THAT IS. and of all others, make that his chiefest Name and Title; might eafily be shewed, and confirmed by many reasons and authorities, if need were. But because it is a high point, which all men are not fo capable of, we shall content our selves with some plain pallages, which may, in part furfice us, to ground that interpretation of those words of Solomon upon, which we shall commend unto the Reader. First, Sr. Paul faith We look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not feen: for the things which are feen, are temporal; (\pipo nguege; ten porar); but for a time, properly) but the things which are not jeen, are eternal. Secondly, the same Apossile (it is the opinion of many ancients, that he is the authour of that Epiftle, though it is much opposed by some others) in his Epiftle to the Hebrews, chap, to 34. doth most elegantly oppole to vage x orra, (as commonly but most improperly even in the judgement of divers ancient Heathens, called) that is, worldly go ds , wealth, or substance; to that ungers, (to be calls it; which is the very word of Solomon, Wo or, nowin interpreted in Greek) or, substance which is permanent and eternal. For ye had compassion of me in my bands, faith he; and took jeyfully the freyling of your goods, (nir n my danas, saith nes, and now, projecto in spring of pour gouss, tape a grangho row of mugy collars) knowing in your felves, that ye have in heaven (kgirova Gweger is vegavis) a better and enduring [ab. flance. Then laftly, Solomon himself, of riches and worldly goods, faith directly, that they are not, Chap. 23.5. Wilt thou fet thine eves upon that which is not ? for riches, &c. just as the ancient Greek Phylosophers, and others, speak of them when they flyle them, druwygern; things that are not. All these things, put together, I con-clude, that by THUIFI in this place, and by Wint that other, Solemon doth intend fomewhat permanent and eternal, that may lemon doth intena tomewhat permanent and eternar, mat may truly be faid, to have reality of exiftence, in opposition otranforor worldly goods. And what should that be, but eternal life. Most Rabbins, I know, by these words, understand the law, which is in effect, as much, as sound wisdom, is an effect of the knowledge of the Law : but that fense is not so proper here, neither to the place, nor to the word, taken in its propiety, neither is there want of Rabbins, that have embraced this fenle; which I prefer before others. The author of Zohar, (a book of great credit among the Jews: and of as great antiquity, if they may be believed; for which I will not passe my word) hath these words: What is to? That world which is to come, which shall never end And cerrain it is, that accordingly, the word is used by some ancient Rabbins, pro futuro feculo; that is, for eternal life. But it is not their authority that I trust to, or would have my Reader to ground upon : If there be not reason enough for this interpretation besides, I shall not presse him to imbrace it. But such passages as speak, though but obscurely, of eternal life and rewards, I would make, much of, because it is a subject in those days, among the Jews, but sparingly spoken of: whereof, see upon Plal, 49.88. 37. Some surther consistmation of this interpretation, the LXX. also do assort, who render the word here by owneray: falvation, It is thought by fome that they read it, not TIDIN as we have it; but TUNN from yw falvavit, &c which though plaufible, at first hearing; yet well confidered, may prove more plaufible than true. For who knowes not, that the LXX do often expresse the sense, which they apprehended to be chiefly intended; though it be much further fometimes from the very letter of the original, than correla, is from ושירה for it; though it be granted that it is more proper to it, than to the former : yea, and granted too, that there be many examples of such whether miflakes, or varieties, in the Greek translation, that now goes under that name. See also concerning the verb JOK here used, in the next Note, Nevertheleffe, if any man like better, by Thuil here, to understand found wifdom, because that is conceived the most ordinary fignification, that will best agree with most places; and that most Expositors are for it here too ; I am not against it, More concerning the word TOWIT, and its different fignifications, fee upon Chap, 18.1. However, if we were bound to it, or any man like it bet ter, than that which is more generally received; it will be no very difficult thing. Firth, Gen. 15. 1, I am thy shield, and the exceeding great reward, saith God to Abraham, I will not question the sense, of thield, there I only observe that shield, and reward are joyned together, as buckler, and eternitie, or eternal falvation (an exceeding great reward, indeed, and what is, to speak properly, but eternitie? xed 3 D'mp Bodilv ars u'mpGeofin 2 Cor. 4.17.) here, But then, Ephef. 6.17 the helmer of falvation, we have the words of the Apostle. And if we may fay the believet, why not as properly, the buckler of falvation, or eternitie; and in very deed, the hope of falvation, or eternal life, is a great buckler, in time of diffres, when all other helps de fail. Therefore we faint not, faith the Apostle, 2 Cor. 4.16, and Christ himself, (our example, the author and finisher of our faith: (for the joy that was set before him, endured the crosse, &c. V. 8. He keepeth Heb. To keep and accordingly as we translate to keep, or he keepeth (both which the Hebrew will bear:) the sense will be different. If, to leep; then it belongs unto his faints, and the meaning will be, that God doth so protect and preferve the godly; or those that are his, and so effectually guide them by his holy spirit, that they are able to keep the paths of judgement: that is, the right way, both in matter of action, and beliefe. An obvious sense, often occuring in all parts of Scripture. But if, he keepeth: (which the coherence with the next words doth feem to require:) then it must be referred unto God himself; and the sense will be, that God by protecting the godly, doth manifest his justice unto men. V. 10. When wisdom entreth into thine heart This is very proper and emphaticaal. For a man may talk of wisdom; yea and be able to difcourse of it, of the nature and proprieties; largely and learnedly and to write of it too, with commendation; as we know there be that preach, very plaufibly, who are or have been known very lewd, (the more the pittie fuch should be sufferd) in their lives and conve fations : and the reason is, because they have it well in their tongues, and in their braines what they have of it, but nothing in their hearts. And to long as that is not affected, our wifdom may dos good unto others perchance, and fometimes, more hurt, than good: but as to our felves, there is nothing done yet any our case is more lawentable and dangerous, than if we had no knowledge at all. So ancient philosophers speak too : Sen. Confol, ad Helu.c. 16. talla funt disciplina um omnium fundamenta. Nunc ad illas revertere, tutum te prestabunt illa —— fi bona fide animum tuum intraverint, &c. and fo others frequently

18. 27. Whose wayes are croised, and they from and in their paths]O:, and they croised in their paths. So Merc. Quorum via perverse sant dy perversi saus in visi sus, I constelle the Hebrew words for perverse in the first member, and froward, (or, perverse:) in the second, are different words, but, of one and the same signification, according to the exposition of the learned Jews, Now the 13. 14. and 15. verse (which is this) seeme to tend most to one thing, to fet out aperverse man : or rather, the crookednesse and perversitie of a wicked man, that hath not the tear of God in his heart, nor maketh any confejence; who hath no rule to walk by, but his own lufts and defires. Solomon fets out divers words & expressions; the crookednesse of their wayes, that are such; a thing much insisted upon by ancient philofophers also: who also expresse it with much varieties, and divers fimilitudes:vyherein(as in many other things) the good agreement inultinues vyneten (as in nany outer tinings) inte good agreement of the Authors, vyho are most copious upon it. Seneca: Maximum judicium est mala mentis, studiuatio, so inter simulationem wirutum, amoremque vitisrum, affidua justiatio. And in another place: Quid porro, nonne nune quoque (etiamfi parum sentiatu) turbo quidam animos vestros rotat, de involvit sugientes perentesque eadem; de nune in sublime allevatos; nune in infima allifos rapit? besides many other places of the same author, to the same purpose. But there is somewhat in Solomons words, which in a prophane author whether Poet, or Orator would have been looked upon perchance as a piece of great vvit and much commended. For vyhilest in this verse he describeth (he doth endeavour to fet out, I vyould fay should I speak of a common author) the perveriness and crookednesse of wicked men, he hath made his speech or words somewhat like unto them, though a notable incongruitie; joyning a feminin(מקשום א ארוווה) and a masculin together. I knovy what is said by some to reconcile the words to Grammer : but with fuch libertie, that a man may fay there is no fuch thing at all as incongruitie in any veritor, or speaker, Novy that Solomon made it so of purpose to imitate 6 R

And the English harlor, every body knows, was once the name of a woman ene engum matio-severy body knows/was once the name of a woman a proper num; originally. See also upon Chap, 7, 3, 0. He bath tracen a bat of forms). Now, what is here, as also Chap, 5, and essewhere, co-cerning an adulterous woman, as by Rabbi Solomon expounded of idolatry, superstition, heresie, false opinions, and the like, by which a man is seduced from the true knowledge and worship of God, O ther Rabbins, as Ben Gerson upon this place, and Rabbi Ben Maimon the most famous, (and not without cause) of all Rabbins, in his excellent More Nevochim; apply to the materiall part of man, that is, to the body, and senses; or to the phantasie, or Imaginative faculty, by which (for they all come to one) the Mind, or underflanding faculty, which by God was appointed to rule and to govern, (therefore called by the Greek Philosophers, 70 11) the original of the control of the c that is, or, facultas imperatrix:) is by secret intisements in most men undermined, and enthralled: which in very deed (being so weakned by Adams fall) is the originall cause of all mischief, and wickednesse in all men. To this ancient Philosophers also agree, who though they knew not of Adams fall, nor whence, originally, proceeded the weaknesse of reason, (his better pair) in man, so apt to be seduced, and to yelld it self to the senses, they generally afferibed the ground of all diforder to the material part, which they called wan: and spake of the baits and allurements of it, much to the fame purpole, as Solomon doth here in the person of a woman. This is also very excellently well prosecuted by an ancient Holy man and Martyr, called Maximus Monashus, in his Divine Meditations, which he inscribed, Kerahata. Now to say with some, that Solomon in all this, had no further aim, than to diffwade from fornication and adultery, taken literally and properly; truly I think were to do him some wrong. It cannot be that so wise a man, so well acquainted with ancient Parables and allegories, in fo many reiterated expressions. should have no thought at all of a thing (to a Philosophical contemplative man,) so obvious; & in very deed in an allegorical way, of all allegories I ever met with, most proper and natural. Yet that this was his primary aim or intention, confidering to whom and for whose use he wrote these Proverbs, Iwould not fay: nor make it the literall immediate sense, as some do. As for that objection in Rabby Sol, that this were no great commendation of the law of God, if it did onely deliver from fornication and a dultery; we answer; First, that it dorh not follow from the words here, or any other, where the same matter is spoken of. Why is this here mo e particularly mentioned, and infifted upon, hath already been shewed in the Preface. Besides, that fornication and adultery, (especially by a strange woman, we understand properly, one that is of another country) might, by consequent, and so literally, include Idolatry, and heresie, we easily grant : as it sell out in Solomon himself, who by strange women (his wives and concubines:) was drawn to idolatry in his old age, 1 Kings 11. 4. &c. No wonder therefore if Solomon infift upon it often both for the fowlnesse of the crime, in it felf, altogether incomparable with true divine wildom; and for the confequence of it, in these considerations : In this Introduction especially, (these first eight or nine Chapters as we have said before:) which was more particularly intended for them, who by reason of their youth were but strangers to the businesse of the world, and were yet to chuse their way, (that of pleasure, or that of world, and were yet to thus their way, (this of peanits, of that of virtue!) as their own Good Genius, and Gods spirit should direct them. 8.7.1. the guide of her youth | That is, her hulband, who married let in her youth, whose office is to guide her, and to whom the orghe to be fubject, I Pet. 3. 7. The Hebrew word I YNA doth properly fen se a Capatain of thousand men: whereupon some have grounded a conceit, the timay palle perchance for a jeftyor a peice of wit; but must not be seriously entertained by any sober man; to wit, that a young womans husband was called 1178 because it was as hard a bufiness for a man to rule a young woman, as to rule a thousand men, or fouldiers, But that jest will be spoiled, if the

them whom he for skes of (a thing don: by divers auchors,) I will | the truth be known, which is fit to be known however, to prevent great matters from them, affecting to build upon fand rather, than upon firme ground, First then we say, that though 7178 be most properly xixiagxos (a captain of 1000) and fo rendred by the Lxx. in many places : yet more generally, it also fignifies a captain absolutely, any captain, or guide without any referrence to 1000. 139μότα: as by the Lxx. is expressed. I will not waste time in examples of either, which are very obvious. But secondly, we say that the same word, from the same root, but in another signification, signifieth a friend, an intimate friend; from 17% copulars, to joyne together, which fignification though it have loft in the Hebrewtongue, (as in hath hapned to many, or most Hebrew words, for want of flore of books written in the Hebrew tongue, when it was purely fpoken:) yet it still retaineth it in the Arabick(a dialact of the Hebrew:) as by fome learned men hath been thewed, So that even here in this place, the Hebrew word might have been translated friend, as well as guide, and more truly perchance, as chap. 16, 28.8 chap. 17. 9. we find it not in the Chaldee paraphrase only, and Greek version: (observed long ago by Mercer;) but in others also, exhibited in that incflimable and unparallel d Bible, set out by Dr. Walton, in London: yea in our English bible too cheif friends, in the first place; very friends, in the second And were this a fit place, I think I could argue it unto probabilitie, that the very word $12; in Greek, came from the Hebrew. Now, the friend of her youth, is very emphatical, because, naturally, those friends are dearest one to another, who have been fuch in their youths. V. 3. Let not mere and truth for lake the? Deale mercifully and truly with all men. So we finde these two joyned together in divers places of Scripture, as Hosea, 4, 1, because there is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in Decaye there is no train, not mercy, not remove go you the land; and in this book of Proverbs, as Chapter 20, 28, Mercy and truth preferve the King. Some men may be naturally compaffionate; not out of confeience, or respect to God; but out of some natural tendernelle: who therefore in their dealings with men, stick not at any thing that is for their advantage, be it just, or unjust. Others again, make great boast of justice, and seeme to be very strict and punctuall in their dealings: but their fault is , that they are all justice, without any tendernesse or compassion, he the case or cause never fo favourable, in the eyes of other men. They please themselves in their rigour and inexorableness, as though that were an argument to them of their justice, whereas, in fuch cases, the old saying proves commonly true : Summum jus, jumna injuria, that is, juffice without mero, (in due time and place) is greatest injustice. It is not therefore without great caule that these are so often joyned together, mero, and truth; which if we separate in our practice, we may be mercifull, or just and true, in our own conceits, or in may be increasing or just and true, in our own concerts, or in the opinion of fome: but in very truth, and in the eyes of God, we are neither. For fince that God hath fo joyned them, there is the fame obligation for both: fo that either of them, without the other, is not, nor can be in obedience to God. without the other, is hos, not can be in occalence to God, (it is but mer delufion to think fo:) but out of fone other caule. There be who by these words would have the whole duty of man comprehended, referring merg, unto men; that is, to our dealings with men: and truth, unto God: that is, to those duries, that have more immediat reference unto God; as faith, and a good conscience towards God. Indeed, a man may be both mercifull and true, (or just,) in outward appearance, to get this praise of men; or for some outward appearance, to get unis praine or men; or rot tome the continuation of the con yet not truly, and acceptany nerviewed con; except to of or Gods fake, principally, and in obdience to his commandements. See more to this purpose upon Chapter, 1, 7.

The feare of the Lord, &ce. This sense is good, but not so proper here, as the former, in my judgement. But there is yet a far different sense made of the words, by some chief expositers, as Mercerus, and others. They refer both thefe, mercy and as Mercerus, and others. Iney terer out these, mercy and truth, unto God, not as the object, but as the author, or fountain of both. And so indeed we finde them, so joyned, spoken of God.

So in the Pfalms often; and elsewhere. So in this book too: Do they not erre, that devise evill? but mer-ey and truth shall be to them that devise gord, Chapter, 14, 22. And in what sense adscribed unto God, see upon Psalm, 85. 7. and elsewhere. Then the words (if we follow this sense) 7. and ellewhere, then the words (18 we to how this tenne) must be translated: Mercy and truth full our firstell either, beind them, &c., But neither is the fenfe fo proper to the coherence; nor fo naturall to the particular, which rather implies has Imperative. When mans wayes please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with himfelf, And some observe here the propriety of the vebe, to finde, upon which they inferre, that as a thing is properly found (Fugnus in the Greeke) that was not fought, or expected; fo the grace of God, and his gifts, are altogether free, without any precedent meritorious acts of ours. The doctrine is good; but if it had no better ground, I would not obligge any man to beleeve it. It may feeme, to put us in minde, not to ground our faith upon.

good understanding] Or, good successe. The Hebrew verbe, שכל not in different conjugations only, but even in the same, doth signific to be wise: to be endowed with good understanding; and, to prosper, or to have successe. And there is great reason for this communication of fignifications, because of the neer dependency in the things themselves. That goodunderst and ding, (that is, prudence, and discretion:) doth often beget good successe, no man makes any question; and that want of understanding, is the overthrow of many publique and private citates. But on the other fide, that good fuccesse, which sometimes by a stronger power is cast upon weake, yea, wicked attempts, doth intitle rafhnesse and folly, yea mere madnesse sometimes, to wisdom and prudence in the opinion of the world, is the obfervation of many ancient Historians, and other approved judicious Writers. Among other, Demosthenes, hath this observation: 'At yap sunga flat Derval συγκρυφαι κε ευκιάσαι τος αμαςτίας των ανθρώσων, &c. that is, Prosperity and good successe, is of great force to hide and shadow the faults of men: but if once they begin to tripsthen all such things are discovered and come to open light. So that one word may very wel fignific both, and theymust be men of folid judgements, that can d Iceru between good successe, by chance, and real underunderstanding and prudence : and upright honest men too, that they be not carried with the current, and feffer their judgements (as most 'men, when wicked men rule :) to be overlwayed, and, in time, blinded by their affections. And in this place particularly; good successe may do very well, since all men know, that not only Godsfavour, really is the cause of good successe, for the most part : but even the opinion of it, though grounded upon error, or delusion, doth often not a little prevail to that in the fight of God and man] Some referre these words to favour; because often so joyned in Scripture; and then bring favor; because otten to joyned in Scripture; and then olding in goal underflanding, after. I confelle there be examples of such trajellions; (as they call them) in Scripture; fome that may be thought as harth as this. But then we must say withall, that necessity of admitting such trajellions in such places, doth appear more, than it doth here. All men that are wife, or endowed with a good understanding, are not known to be fo, or generally accounted fo. The credit of wildome, in the world, is a thing that goes as much by favour, and good luck, as any thing that I know. See what hath been faid of good successe, upon the former words. Besides, envie and malice doe often blast the credit of men of great abilitie; and there be artificers in the world; to cry up them for 6 R 2

The navel is as it were the harder and more folid, under the other. The navel is as it were the Knor, in apparence at leaft, which hange or faftens all the belly, the feat of the foffed parts: and 6 is called by fome, ligamentum intellinatum. It is possible also, that there might be some allusion, in the expression, to arches in building, where one stone, that which is in the middle, called also sometimes, umbilicus, seems to bind the whole arch. Unus lapu fecit fornicem :ille qui latera inclinata cuneavit, & interventu fie vinxit. Whence it is, that Author of the book De mundo, (intitled to Ariftotle) how fitly, I know not; but very elegantly compareth God to thele umbilical flones, as by whom the whole world, all parts of it, are sustained and preserved. The same ancientLatin Autho-, whose words I had but now, speaks of it in another place; Democritus invenisse dicitur fornicem, ut lapidum curvatura Paulatim inclinatorum medio saxo alligaretur. But he denies it and maintaineth that long before Democritus such building was in fashion. fuch as is imparted unto man, by God; he proceeds now into admiration of divine wildom, as it is in God himlelfe, and sheweth the wonderful effects of it, to the end, partly, that yve might the sooner be drawn to the love and esteem of so heavenly a thing; and partly, that eve might the better understand the truth of what he had delivered before, that all wit and wildom in man, of what it had entwered octore, that all wit and whitin in man, doth proceed from God, and is his gift; and therefore to be expedied from him onely. This I conceive is the best and plainest coherence. We may also understand Christ, the son of God largers is υπόι ατον: the substantial, and consubstantia word of God, yea the power and wisdom of God: 1 Cor. 1. 24. in whom! all the treasures of wildome and knowledge are hid. V, 20. By his knowledge the depths are broken up \ Thole deep placeces, into which the waters were driven at the beginning, Gen. 1.9. So some others, have other interpretations, But the most probable of all, is, to understand it of fountains and springs, which rivers are made of, without which the earth would not be habitable, and therefore mentioned here as a great effect of Gods wisdome, and prudence towards mankind. Now concerning fountains and springs, there be divers questions in philosophic; the resolution whereof would very much fet out the power and wisdom of God in contriveing things to ulefully, and yet so hiddenly, that the wisdom of man is posed in the consideration of the causes Besides philosophers, Plutarch, as I remember, hath some considerations upon the cause of fountains and fprings, in the life of Paulus Æmylius.

Avoid it, passe not by it : turne from it, and passe a way.] Of the danger of evill companie, and the leasonableneile of such warnings, see before upon Chap. 1. 10. My son, if sinners entice thee : and the referrences there, Now, here by so many words in the 15. verse, for one thing: being all of one signification; as may seem to make a notorious tautologie, or battologie; though indeed it is o-therwife. For the accumulating of so many words of one signification, upon fuch an occasion, is very emphatical. Solomon by this reiterated language, (which is naturall in fuch cases) would have us to unde. stand the eminencie, and imminencie both of the danger that young men are in through ill companie. As if passing by in the freets, we should descrie fire breaking out of a house, which had not been taken notice of:or,upon the high wayes, we flould observe fome ignorant traveller, in a ful carrier, to fome terribleprecipiec: no body would wonder to hear us often repeat the same words; as file, fier: a precipice, a precipice: take heed, look to your felf: and the ner : a precipiee a precipiee : rake need, took to you ren : and the like. So is this unufual repition of words here of purpole, to make us the more lenfible of that, which though it be lo true, as nothing can be more; yet is so little beleeved, that more young men laugh at it, when they are told of it; than are perswaded, that there is any danger in it. And when, in what age, or what place of the world did men, whether heathens, or christians (fo called) generally, men and women, indulge to themselves more libertie in this kind; than they do, now, in these times, which we are taught to call (so little we make of mocking God:) blessed and happy times and times of reformation? fuch earnestnesse of language we may observe in Theognis, (that ancient Gnomologue, who comes neerest to So-fit with them, and pleafe them : for their power is great, faith he, what

And thus are they also very lively represented by an ancient Comic upon the very same occasion of dishwasion, from them, and their company. Solomons words may receive some light by the collation: which I think is the best use we can make of such authors; and I protefic that in many places of Scripture, both of the Old, and New Testament, where best Commentators left me very doubtfull, I have received much fatisfaction from fuch collations : as Beza doth professe somewhere, that he was beholding to Anacreon, (a very wanton Poet otherwise :) for the right sense of a place of Scripture, Plautus is the man that I mean; who in one of his Comedies, makes a father speak to his fon in this manner : ---- Nelv ego cum improbis te viris, Gnate mi. neque in via neque in foro ullum fermonem exequi, (Here we have the substance of the 14 and 15 verses) Novi ego bot seculum moribus quibus sit; masus bonum malum esse vult; or sit sui fimilis. V.6. Left then shouldest ponder the path of life, her wayes are move-able, &c.] The words as Mercerus well observeth, are somewhat obscure and admit of different interpretations, Some translate, semitam vite foifitan fi ponderes, &c. to this effect. If then beel about to confider of the right ways the way that leads to prefent happines in this world, and to eternal life, hereafter ? take heed of fuch; avoid them with all possible care, since nothing can be more contrary to such a purpose, or deliberation, than the wayes and company of such lewd infinuating women. Whether thou be already in the way, or upon a deliberation concerning the right way, take heed of fuch their actine ration conserring the right way case need or most time! company it house inght, will be rever thee; if yet to refolve, and in the act of further deliberation (as most that are young yet) and inquisition, they will blind thy judgement; thou shalt not be able to judge angles, of what is best and expedient; what leads so true to judge aright, of what is best and expedient; what leads so true happinefle; what to certain mifery and destruction. It is the faying of Atifole in his Politicks, that or er mader or Jos, they that are prepoffeffed with any paffion, (whether it be passion of love, or sear, or any other) cannot descen the truth. Aristotle teacheth in his Ethicks at large, that as men are habituated in their lives and converfatias large, that as men are nauthated in their lives and convertations, to are their judgements inclined and fwaied, concerning, that which is morally good or bad; and that Tolks nothing is defined in n dorn's soiks yes at : most men are corrupted in their judgement through pleasure and sensuality; which they might have prevented, had they not run out into lewd comifes. Others would have this to be the lenfe; That if a man be once habituated, and inured to lewd courses, though afterwards, when he begins to find the inconvenience of it, he would fain get out, yet it is not in his power; vefligia nulla retorfum; as one of the Latin Poets hath it; None that go Bigia nulla retofum: as one of the Latin Peets thath it, None that go unto her, yeturue again: neither task tho hold on the paths of it. OLIP. 2.19. The confideration whereof thould be of great force to make men weavy, if not altogether dupid, or of themfelveseved deferrate. Others again, because the Hebrew verbs (JMP) and DPDPP) (according to the propriete of that tongue) may be transferred by the fector and acquisitin fingulars, or by the third feminin fingular also, they refer this to the adulteredic, and transface: Per semitam vita non ambulat t vagantur ejus orbita, ne stiat. Certainly, though it be the profession of such creatures, to intice and cheat others; yet themselves were first cheated by the devil, before they could resolve to profittute themselves to so much infamie, (befides the danger of eternal death, which few of that desperate crew think of) before God and men. Other Expositions there be, but reducible to thele, as to the main: Yet I doe not find in any, that which I should of my felf pitch upon, as most literal and probable. It is observed by some others too, but by Comicks especially, who of all others should be best acquainted with their customs and dispositions:that as there is nothing more effectual to dif-ingage the mind of those that cleave unto sich as are here spoken of than to fee them (their manners and their conditions) in their own natural shape and colour, without any disguise: and to know their own unaffected carriage and behaviour at home, when they are alone among themfelve : fo there is nothing, that fuch more avoid, than to be fo feen Felve: 1 to there is snothing, that tuch more avoid, than to be fo feen and known. It made one of the Comedy, out or his good will only good friend and marker, to applied himself extremly, that he had found on a way, (—quamba delejichnika Meersteinem ingenia de found on a way, (—quamba delejichnika Meersteinem ingenia de mare sejfit in ferre, Matorè in tom noit preptino oderit) how he might make thom known to him, by times, making no quellon at all judicial one delenom, he would ever after abhor them; and after a pretty found to the property of the delenom to him, by the delenom to th large description of their domestick nastinesse and gluttony, so contrary to what they appear abroad; he concludes, (Noffe hec omnia, jalus oft adolescentulis:) That to know thele things in time is happinefle, and as it were deliverance from death to young men, I conerive therefore; that Solomons purpose in this verse was no other, thus to fet out the cunning of fuch creatures, who knowing well enough, that nothing can be more prejudicall to them then to be Left then fhouldest pender] There is much weight in that word. t is not bare pondering that can do good alone, except after follow confent, or aftent and resolution. But by pondering, he comprecontent, or anent and resolution, out oy pointering, in comprehends thefe alfo, as hippofing that no man can be fo mad or fenf-lefle, (the defire of happinefle being naturall unto all men) as that after he hath ferfoully, again and again confidered (which is underflood by pondering: a thing nor to be done, but with care and diligence) of his cafe and of the end and confequent of these courses he is in, that he should continue in them to his apparent destruction, both of body and foul; both temporal and cternal. The word A of Course is used in the New Testament, to the fame purpofe, which properly fignifies, patare, to cast accounts : a very proper and fignificant word too, as any can be. It is the word used by St. Paul, Rom. 8. 18. speaking of the sufferings of the godly in this world, compared with eternal rewards: Aoji Couat jat; For I rection, &c. Certainly, want of this fober, ferious confideration and ratiocanation, (the proper work of a rational creature) is the greatest cause of most mens predition.

Left thou give thine honour unto others, and thy years to the ernel] By honour, he may understand his wealth and good name by others, the strumpers themselves; so stiled in scorn, in opposition to a lawfull wife, which by Gods constitution and ordinance, is one flesh with her husband, Matth 19.4.5. Or, her children and kindred. By the truel some would have the husband of this adulterelle intended, of whom Chap. 6.35.36, it is faid, that jeal-ufiets the rage of a aca, or whom chaps, 35,66, it is the day of vengeance, 8c. that sin effect (compared with vertle 32, before, that he that committed adulter) with a woman, destroyeth his own soul, 8cc, (that he will slay the adulterer without mercy ; him therefore by the cruel here to be understood, which is not improbable. Yet there will be more emphafis in the word, if it be understood of the adultereste her self, it being the propriety of fuch creatures, as they are described ordinarily by the Comicks, as to put off all sense of honesty, so of humanity. No high-way cut-throats can be more cruel than such, when they find their time. Terence is noted to have done that which no man ever before him did: that is, to have represented some of that profession, doing some acts of ingenuity. But it was the Poets ingenuity, it is thought, to set them out so, rather, than that any did really deferve it. But besides, there is a manifest allusion in the words, betyven ביחרא, (alieni) others, and אכורו, (crudelii)the cruel. Such allusions are very frequent in Scripture. There is also somewhat observeable between the words of this, and the next verfe, which I leave to them that read the Book in the Original lan-

And again, we may with the LXX, and some other translations, by a figure called 2. Sea Surive: (whereof there be many examples in Scripture:) take thy flesh and thy body, for, the flesh of thy body. But think it more pathe tical, and emphatical, if we take felb and body, (as usually; in the Scripture) for the same : it being a precept of rhetorick, to infift with variety of words, upon a thing, which is effectual to our end, and is of it self plausible. And what more effectual, to reclaim a man (that is not quite given over to a repro bate mind,) from these vicious courses; than the consideration of those both painfull, and loathsome diseases, that use to accompany them! And what more plaufible, than to perswade men to love their own sless (which the Apostle saith, no man ever hated) and to make much of their bodies? which, in a wrong fense, and to the prejudice of their foules, (that better part) moft men are too prone unto, of their own accord

V. 15. Drink waters out of thine own eistern, and running waters, &c.] Of the meaning of particular words, in this, and the two next verses, there is no doubt made: but of the sense and meaning of the whole passage, there is, Some by cisterns, &c, understand lands, and poslessions, or worldly goods in generall; as if the aim of the words were to perswade them that have means, to live of, and upon their own; and not onely contentedly to enjoy what God hath bestowed upon them, but to endeavour that others also (the poor especially) may be the better for what they have : fo to ule their means , and not to waste them prodigally, and riotously with, and upon lewd company, whether of men, or women, So St. Basil, or to this purpose, of old; and Junius, among the later, do interpret this passage. But because women are spoken of immediately before, and presently after two, so that the wole Chapter may probably be thought to be of one argument : to wit, to contain a ferious dehortation from the company of lewd women, and to that end, first to set down the danger and mifery of fuch a life; and then, the remedy, or antidote: to wit, lawfull mariage : there being nothing heterogeneous, or improper (this one controverted passage excepted) to that argument in the whole Chapter : this hath moved the greater number of Expofiors, rather to interpret this passage also to the same purpose making the faid prescribed remedy, an antidote against fornication and adultery, (to wit, lawfull marriage:) here to begin. Which is very plaufile in opposition to that former interpretation : though in that also there is somewhat to the general scope and purpose of the whole Chapter, to wit against riotousnesse and lewd company; but nothing fo direct and pertinent, as this fecond interpretation frems to be. Neither can any doubt be made of the propriety, or purpole; where no question can be made of the sentences, so, for interpreted, which we have essentied in 5 to this, or the like purpole; where no question can be made of the sense: as Chap. 9.

make these three verses in the prosecution of the said allegory, or allegorical expolition, to hang together, which I confelle is more than I can well do my felf, or can lay, that I have yet met in any other , what I thought fatisfactory. Drink maters out of thine own ciflern, &c. that is, fay they, Get a wife of thine own, and delight in her, to extinguish the fire of luft in a cleer well, and not in dirty puddles, which strumpets are. Let thy funtains be differfed aty puddles, which irunpers are, Let my Johnston or anysyste and broad, and rivers of waters in the fireces; that is, lay they, from thee and thy wife, as pure fountains, let a numerous iffue of well nurrured children plying or flow; which may runne, or spread in the streets abroad, as so many clear riverers, to water and comfort by marriages and otherwise, the whole neighbourhood; and to be an ornament to thy left, hildren, indeed, as they are the chief fruit of marriage; fo in opposition to adulterous beds too, is the mention of them very proper; becouse neither so natural (and there is a natural cause for it;) to fuch; to fuch I mean, as make a trade of their proflitution; nor any part (ordinarily) of their intention, in their unlawful copulations. The feuse therefore that they make of the words is good; but the expression seems to me rather enigmaticall, than allegori-cal: and though there is apparent reason why Solomon should expresse those things rather allegorically, than otherwise; yet why to obscurely, and enignaticall, I cannot imagine. Neither is it the obscurity onely, that I stick at, but the ambiguity. For what he faith in the second verse, in a more obvious construction, may feem to croffe the first; but especially the third, Let them be onely thine own, and not Strangers with thee, to croffe the fecond ; Let them he onely thine own, &c that is, fay they, let those rivers of waters illuing from those fountains; (that is, from thy lawfull wives : it being then lawful, or allowed to one man to have more wives than one) that iffue, those children, be thine only, and undoubtedly; as they may be, if thou meddle with no woman, but fuch as is thine own : whereas, if unlawfully begotten, thou mayest have the name, but the true father will be uncertain, and others may challenge an interest in them, to thy shame and reproach : and fome of them proving suppositions, strangers shall carry away part of thy wealth and substance. This is good matter, if it can be made of these words: which, in ordinary construction, feem rather to contradict what was before delivered. And hence it is, that fome of old apprehending a manifest contradiction in the words, to reconcile them, did supply a negative in the second verse, Let not thy fountains be dispersed abroad, &c. So the Roman edition of the Sep-tuagint; and fo Aquila his translation, which is also followed by ancient Origen, and by Clemens Alexandrinus; as is observed by Cornelius a Lapide, upon this place. Others, but to the same effeet, have found a way (because they find it not in the Heb.) to supply this negative, reading the word by way of interrogation: fould thy fountains be dispersed abroad, and rivers of waters in the streets ? There is no violence offered to the Text by this; and the coherence is much better by it. But it doth not give content : for I find it not followed by many. These considerations as they make me to have the better opinion of the first interpretation; fo they give me the liberty to cast about and search, whether any thing else may be found as probable for the fenfe, as what hath been faid, and not lyable to the same exceptions; that is, not involved with such obscurity, or ambiguity of expression I cannot say that I have found what I would : but what I have thought of, I shall here impart to the reader. Why might not all this pallage be taken literally, as well as allegorically? That this expression, for a man to drink of his own nell, or aftern : (for both come to one, and the difference in the words is but little in the original:) is an expression of temporal peace and happiness,may appear by 2 King, 18 31, eat ye every man of his own vine, and every one of his figuree, and drink ye every one the waters of his own eiftern; repeated Isa 36, 16. And what a considerable thing a well or a fountain, was in ancient times, as by many other evidences, so particularly may appear by the word frater, brother : which originally came from the Hebrew 783: but more immediactly) as all learned Linguists acknowledge) from the Greek off-actly as all learned Linguists acknowledge) from the Greek off-actly as all learned Linguists a well; as if community of the lame well, or fountain (pagani came thence also, and divers other words:) had been the greatest bond of union among men, At such times therefore such advice could not be thought impertinent : That every man that wes a house-keeper , and master of a confiderable family should be carefull to provide himself of a conveniency of water, both for his own use, and to pleasure his poor neighbours : which no man, (to preyent strikes and contentions. which often did arife about wells, and common waters) might challenge an interest in, but himself. That this doth very naturally arife from the words, I think there will be no queftion; & many fuch precepts, or admonitions there be in this Book, Mercerus doth often observe, that are meerly Occonomical: which they that do not ob-ferve, and would be wifer than Solomon, turn into impertinent allegories. All the objection will be, which was against the first interpretation, vvhy Solomon should interpole this here, vyhich is of ons, where the Chapter runs most upon some one subject, may not be oblerved. Besides, these Proverbs, as most are of opinion, being for the most part but collections, it is impossible that the commor name of well or fountain, though literal, in the one; and allegorical in the other, might occasion this conjunction of different pre cat in the other, might occanon this conjunction of unicerity recepts or influctions. And fince the allegory or fimilitude is grounded upon fome relemblance in the nature of the things, (which is particularly infilted upon and shewed by some Expositors; but pacticularly infinite upon and interest by other Exponents, and of purpose; as they profess themselves, palmore districtly, and of purpose; as they profess themselves, palmore districtly of the physica dy medica de analogia. eifterne dy putei cum famina : fed parco caftis auribus , &cc. faith cificing of pairs usin jumina. Jee parce saftir activation one:) it was not altogether impoper, or inconfequent, from precepts concerning literal wells and waters; to pafe, to allegorical, and to put both in one Chapter. Nay, though it be granted that what solomon in this place, was chiefly, or only (if you will) to what Solomon in this place, was chiefly, or only (it you will) to commend chaftiry yet ro make his words more graceful and rhe-toricall, he might use fuch an entrance, or treatment as this, taken from the happinefic (according to thole days) of being fole unafter of one good tountain, from which plemy of water did iffue, and for and praceful is fell abroad into many branches? tuch a fountain, unto which no other could claim any right, or title unto: and fo paffe very plaufibly and naturally, as it were, (there being fo much affonity in nature) to the commendation of rhafthy. There he divers finity in nature) to the commendation of chassity. There be divers things of the fame nature, in ch.30 fee there upon ver 15. The horse leech. And upon chap 6.ver 16. Thefe fix things, &c. But this I do but propose, in case it should fall out with any other, as it hath out propose, in case it mount tail out with any other, as it hath done with me, concerning this pullage, not to be fatisfied with the common interpretation. If any can fatisfie themselves with it, I shall advise them to seek no further.

V. 16. Let thy fountains be dispersed abroad] Although, according to that interpretation of the former verse, which we have proing to that interpretation or the rolling very series when we have proposed, these words may be interpreted to signific planty of waters, that issue or of one fountain; which plenty being a great blefing, (especially in a hot country; to which purpose, besides many). ny other places of Scripture, I think Numb. 24. 7. and his feed shall be in many waters; will bear a good sense:) must needs make the benefit and propriety of a good fountain the more confiderable; yet even in this fente, they feem to me not in the matter only, but yet even in this iente, they teem to me not in the matter only, but in their very form and tenor, to have so much appearance of repug-nancie to the former, and following verse; that I can hardly per-fwade my less that Solomon would speak so obscurely. Neither water my ten that solutions are also do not to the Scripture, frould I think rany great crime, or wrong done to the Scripture, if I should joyn with them, that think (whereof upon the former words) that a N T or an 'NB' is wanting But to avoyd offence, I will rather fayy, that if the words be read with an interrogation, (as was showed there) they would be more currant, so; & thesense, not worse. And there may be a good reason for it. For though in point of charity to pleasure poor neighbours; it be commendable; and or charity, to picature proting in the commentation of the community, yet commentation generally plaufible; yet in matter of wells and fountains (a thing fo confiderable in those days) community and communication (befides other inconveniences perchance:) might probably breed prescription; and prescription, quarrels and contentions, and in some cases violence & oppression, But I faid before, if any can fatisfie himfelf with the common interpretation, I do not defire to put him out of conceit with it.

V. 23 He shall die without instruction] Heb, becanse there is no instruction Or because of no correction: Or as Merce: fine correctione: without correction. It because of no correction, the reason is given of his loffe and deftruction; because he was ne er disciplined by his parents, in his youth : nor vifited and chastifed by God in his riper reares: but was fuffered to go on without any control, see Heb. 12. 5,6,7. Or if diciplined, and chaftiled : yet his per erfenelle was 5,657. Or a unexpansed, and cutanties. Yet his performed with the her profited not by fatherly chaffinements as it doth often fall out. Why flowled you be firstless a more and more. Et. 1.5. and 0.61. C. 3.5. In want have I formitte your children, they received not infirstling; and elfewhere. The Greeks have a very proper word to this purpole. They call an intemperate riotous man, exanders : that is properly, an indisciplined man : an unchaftifedjor, one that was never punifhed whether, never, aftually, de facto, as we lay : or, never, effectually, to his amendment. he shall go affray] That is , he shall miscarry : A very p word. For all men naturally , feek one and the fame thing: all, p opole to themselves the same end, generally : to wit, happinest, But in the right way to happinefle: and what it is, that leads a man to reall, not conceited happinefle: or, if you will, what true and reall happinesse is, and wherein it consistent; there is all the difference: and in the mistake of this, is miscarrying of no lesse than life. Therefore all fins, are formetimes called in Scripture er-rors, or, ignorance: 2700/1201 Heb 9.7.8 the Greek word for fin, auagria, or aμας τημα, doth properly fignifie, an erring from the fcope: or, a flooring befides the mark. The Septuagint express to be to, a moning usines the mark. But fince that in the greatest part of the Book no fuch coherence of matter is observed, and that there is no need of

Chap. viit here, more than elsewhere, I think with Mercerus, that the obfervation is rather curious, than necessary. As for the thing it felf, suretiship, both here, and in divers other places of this book; as Chap 20.16. l'ale bis garment, &c. much ipoken againft; Solomons intention herein was not to deter men from doing offices of friendship to their friends : such as either giving, (all manner of liberality, and especially to poor, being much commended in this book:) or lending, according to ability; commended by David, Pfalm 37. & 112, and no where spoken against by Solomon : but onely to warn men against the danger, and abuse of pretended friendship; of which nature this kind of sureriship, which solomon fpeaketh against, seems to be; when a man is importuned, or sollicited by his friend, (if he may be called or accounted a friend, who to cafe himfelf, will put his friend upon such inconveniences;) to engage himself for him, beyond what he is able, either at present, out of his own store; or to bear hereafter, if he be put to it, as in common providence must alwayes be presupposed, that he may probably : which at the best, (be the intentions on both sides never fo fincere) is bad enough; and is befides fubject to much jugling and imposture, whereby many plain honest men are undone by cunning foxes, under colour of friendship. Neither is Solomon the onely that hath been of that mind. It was one of the three famous precepts, or cautions, ascribed unto the Gods, and graven upon the doors of Apollo's Temple at Delphos: and it seems that before Homer, (except he were the fi ft authour of it : it is in his IX. Odylle,) there was a Proverb among the Grecians to that purpose, importing, that furctiship was the character of basenesse and wretchednesse; whereas to give, or to lend, no man doubts, are rather of nobleneffe and with a [tranger] A man to whom thou owest nothing, nor know eft how he will use thee, if thou fall into his hands, Some think that here, by this word ftranger, is particularly intended an userer, who must be a stranger indeed, taken in the propriety of the word; that is, some one of another Nation; no Jew, or Israelite; to whom all kind of usury (among themselves) was forbidden, Deut. 23. 19, 20 but a firanger might be an uturer among them: as they also were allowed to lend upon use to them that were strangers. But there being no mention made of any uje here, but of lending and furetiship onely; there is no necessity, nor much probabi-lity, that an usurer should be intended. It may do as well that firanger be here opposed to friend and acquaintance, as we said be fore. See also upon Chap. 1. 16, from the strange woman.

V. 2. Thou art] Or, And art. Thou art [nared] He forbiddeth us not to become furcties for ou friends, according to the rule of charity; but wills, That we confi der for whom, to whom, and upon what terms we do it; fo that the creditour may not be defrauded, nor our felves damnified.

V. 3. when Or, feeing.
into the hand of thy friend Hebrew, JUT 433. Which words are differently expounded. Some, as Mercerus for one , think that the same is intended, as was before in the first verse, called a stranger. For, saith Mercerus, it is ordinary in the Hebrew tongue, to indite any man a friend, whom we have to do with, (and so in ordinary English too) whether before known, or unknown, See ordinary English too) whether before known, of unknown, oce also upon chap. 11. 15. He shat is firstly for a stranger. And so is the word neighbour, I am sure, not by the Hebrews only, but ancient Grecians also used. And the reason, saith Mercer, why he was called aftranger before, might be to diffinguish him (the creditour from the friend, (for whom the money is borrowed, and the deb contracted) there also mentioned. But others by friend, under-fland a creditor indeed, but not the same as was before called a flanger; but one, who is a friend and acquaintance, properly. For they conceive, that two forts of creditors are here fooken of by So omon; a friend, and a franger. And to that end, fome translate in the first verse, אמרער לרער לדער to the first verse, אמרער לדער to the first, not, for the friend, as we have it there. There is no queflion but the words may be fo translated; nay, no question, but that according to the more ordinary use of the particular, or prefixe 1, that is the more literall translation of the two. Now, lay they , what Solomon adviseth here , should be done by the hythey, what solomon adviced nere, mond of done of the firety, if the creditor he a friend; that he should lofe no time, but speedily humble himself, intreat, get mediators, other friends, &c. much more necessity is there, that the same should be done, if the creditour be a stranger; whom no consideration of friendthip, or acquaintance doth oblige to use him kindly, or mercifully; and therefore a minore ad majus; under the name of friend, the stranger a lo is included in this advice. I like either of these better, than their interpretation, who by friend, would have the party, for whom this furety is in trouble , understood : as if he intended to fay; Since it is so, that thou hast convented, or contrafled with thy friend, to become his furcty, &c.

and make fure thy friend] Or, fo fhalt thou provail with thy friend] The Hebrew word 200 is not ellewhere found in Scripture in the Conjugation Kal, (as they term it) but in this place; and Ezr. 3. Collingation icas, (as they term it) one in time place; and icas, 5, where it is translated, to behave hinfelf; froudly. The child shall behave hinfelf proudly against the ancient, &c. But in Hiphils Cant. 6, 5, there, to overcome; as here: and Pfal, 138, 3 to strengthen: as some would have it , have also, confirmare, or, roborare : robora amicum tuum: but not so well I think. To overenne; certainly; fits but in this place; and it must be understood, of an overcoming by importunity; fuch as Luk. 1 : 8, is emphatically called a: ai-Box: which otherwise doth more properly lignific impadencie.

Thy friend | Some would have thy friends, in the plurall; and fay it is so in the Heb. But they are mistaken. There is a jod in the Hebrew indeed; but not as a fign of the plurall there; but a jed paragogicum, or, exuberant, as best Expositors agree. Now the meaning to fome, is; That if we be not able to pay, nor can find no favour with the creditour, we should be importunate with our friends to free us from him with all speed, as beasts or towls, pursued, sive for their lives, verf. 5. But others, with more probability, make this friend here, to be no other than he that was spoken of before, ver. 1. that is, either the creditor himself, from whom the danger is; or the debior, for whom thou art engaged. I conceive but one & the fame man to be intended. But the advice is good, that we should deal with both in time, what by humility, towards the creditor, as, Mat, 18. 26. & 29. fell down, &c. (and indeed the word DDT here following, may very properly be turned, proftrate thy felfe:) what by importunity, toward him, for whom we are in danger.

V. 4. Give not sleep to thine eys, nor slumber to thine eye-lids JPf. 13.2.4.
V. 6. Go to the ant, thou sluggard Most observe a coherence and think it materiall; which is, that having in the former words and passages given counsel to him that is bound, to bestire himfelf to get himfelf free with all possible speed; he further encourages him (that he might not pretend disability,) by the example of the industrious and provident ant; fo that this, Go to the ant, &c. is more particularly spoken to him, spoken of in the former verses; but yet so neverth leffe, that it was intended also as a general invitation and exhortation, (whereot all stand in need,) to all men, to be industrious and provident, confider her wayes and be wife] Concerning the ant, her industry, providence, and wifdom, (which Solomon would have us to learn from her,) there be many things written by divers, which, because I neither dare absolutely reject, as salfe, there being many things in this kind, to many others incredible, of the truth and certainty whereof I make no question: nor yet can upon my certain knowledge and experience, avouch my felf for true; I shall therefore, though here exhorted by Solomon, in confider her ways, forbear particularly to infift upon. A certain Bithop, a learned man, of Italy, professeth to have seen a kind of little Town (in length, four foot; and one foot broad;) erected by antsunder a ratter, that lay on the ground, out of the way. He describes it very particularly, and their conversation in it; and speaks of it with marvellous confidence; and fome others affirm to have feen the like elfewhere. But not to go beyond what all men know and acknowledge of them; here also, and again, Chap, 30 . 25. avouched by Solomon himfelf; it will be worth our confideration, by what power the ants do this, and how they come by this providence, and this wifdom, which Solomon doth here commend unto us. For there be some, not ancient heathen Phylolophers onely, but even there os tome, not ancient heating ruyonopiners onersy, our even profelled Christians, who grounding upon this, (not this pallage, or testimony, but upon the thing it left here tpoken of and confir-med by Solomon,) and other like instances, and experiments, have maintained that dumb creatures were endowed with reason (year and speech too, some have faid,) as well as men: and others have further argued hence, that the soules of men and beasts, were of one nature, and ellence; both the one, and the other, (as some have maintained) equally immortal; or, (as seme others) equally mortal. But I will not digresse for far; neither, I hope, are they many among us, that need confutation. Divers have written of it; yet not any that I should commend to the Reader more, than Origin, in that incomparable piece of his (which is extant in Greek, and but meanly translated in Latin) against Celsus the Phylosopher. All that I think necessary to say about it here, I shall con-tract into these sew Positions. First, that Solomons lending men to the ant to learn wisdom, is no argument (though some would make one of it) that therefore they are naturally endowed with more wildom, than men are. The argument is a minore ad majus; rather to shame us, than to aver any thing positively concerning them. If they, that want reason, can for their own preservation, by meer in-Rines of nature, do fome aes of reason; how much more unexculable are we, who by God and nature are endowed with reason; of purpole, to provide for the future : to forecast, & to foresee, both for those things that belong to the body; as for those that belong unto the foul: if we make not use of it to that end? SoChrift bids us to conider (it is the fame word) the ravens, Luk, 12.24, and 1- confider the Lillies of the field, ver, 27, and fo may we in fome cases appeal to very fools & children; nor that we would have them thought wife; but that they that are, or flould be, may be assumed, if in any thing they come short of the wildom of such, Secondly, we say, that fuch 20s in brutes proceed not from reason, properly, or any ratio-6 S 2 einative.

chastive faculticiburare infinite of nature, imprinted in the phan- expressed, are taken from the outward carriage; which therefore cinative faculticiour are intiniers on nature, imponere in the phan-fic: and that what we call their providence, is not theirs, properly to freak, but his providence, who is their Creator, and of Nature whose power and providence, when we see such things in dumb creatures, we should as Origin well observes, so much the more admire, who can produce fome effects of reason and wisdom, even from them, that are not rational, nor by nature, capable of any wildom. So that wifdom in them, is not wildom, properly, and truly, but analogically onely. It may be that may be it, that is intended, Chap. 30.14. There be four things that are little upon the intended, Lipa; 30.14. Apere be jour usings usual are intie upon the earth, but they are exceeding wife; 50 there translated; but in the Hebrew it is, spirentia, effecta [apientia; that is, as in the margin there, wife, made wife. For therein is the difference: All men are naturally endowed with the faculty; that is, all men are capable. not warrant. of wildom, by nature: but none become actually wife, but by fludy, and practice, and experience : whereas brutes; what wifdom they have, it is born with them: (we speak of such inflinets, or acts of wildom, in beafts, as are above the ordinary nature or capacity of beafts: fuch as are there spoken of by Solomon: the providence of the ants, for one particularly, ver. 5. The ants are a people ch 4.24.which, as commonly, doth illue, from a perverse evill mind. not frong, Sc.) they are wife, made wife, that is, their wildom is meerly natural, or a pure inftinct of nature in them, no act or ef-V. 13. He winketh with his eyes] To wink often, Chap. 10. 10. feet of reason, or ratiocination. So I think the words may be understood. But to return where we began : we fay lastly, from this nerrion, but to return wnere ver segan : we say lattly from this and other like places of Scripture, we may learn, that the fludy and knowledge of nature, (if well ufed) is very profitable, and doth not a little conduce to piety, and true widom: not therefore to be neglected, as by mod, through idlendle, and want of industry, it is; not to be condemned, as by some supercilious ignorant men, who think it makes athests rather, than promotes piety; which the abuse of it indeed as of the Scriptures, and Picty, which the abuse of it inuced as of the Scriptures, and all other good things) may do, but not the right ufe, such as we commend and with. Having done with the ant, before we proceed to the other matter, I shall onely warne the Reader, that in some Editions of the Septuagints , or Greck translations , after this of the ant, there followes immediately another like exhortation taken from the example of the Bee; Go to the ree, &c. There is not any suspition at all, that ever it was in the Original Hebrew : neither do any Expositors, that I have seen, (not Cornelius à Lapide; or Salazer,) propose it as authentick, but as an addition of the faid Greek Translators meerly; who have many other fuch, in other places; as is generally acknowledged. The onely reason that moveth me fo far to take notice of it, as to warn the Reader of it, is, because most ancient Greek, and some Latin Fathers also, because they found it in that ancient Translation (at least in fome copies of it) which to them for want of the Hebrew, was in fome manner authentick, they take notice of it as part of Proverbs, whose allegations might trouble a man, that should not know it before, and put him to an endlesse labour of seeking, or V.7. which having no guide The ant, that hath none to go before her to show her how to do it, nor none to oversee whether she do it or no, nor no ruler to punish her for idlenes, yet labours much more should men, that have those motives the hath not, Chap. 30.25,27 overseer] Hebr. walketh with a froward mouth] Some by a froward mouth, here, understand one whose mouth or words, in his ordinary talk, and conversation, is divers from his heart: which in very deed, is a very effentiall mark of wickedness: contrary to that ingenuous, and so right. Others, saucy, bold impudent language; spoken of before,

He that winkerb with the eyer, worketh evill, and be that knoweth him, will depart from him. When they are present be will freak freetly, &c. But we must diftinguish between a natural kind of winking, which may preced from weaknesse of eyes or some such inward bodily cause: (Pliny makes frequent winking, to be a fign of timerousnesses, Plerifq; naturale est ut nistare oculis um cessent, que pavidiores esse accepimiu, lib. 11. 37 and hath no dependency from the heart or mind; and that which is occasioned by the motions and fuggestions of the mind, and inward thoughts. Certainly, when that there is much winking in a company, there is just cause to suspective not right: and at the best, if there be no wickednesse in the mind, yet there is incivility in the carriage; especially if it be in company as good, or better than our selvess. But now it must be company as good, or better than our leivess. Dut now a mult be remembred, which was fail but very now, that the convard fignes are probable, (a thing often incultated by Arifodelia his Ethicks) not necessary. it is the subject almost of all that Chapter. However, I do no conceive that this was it that Solomon aimed at nor that his words should be taken and pressed so precisely, as if he intended positively to maintain, that fowing of discord was a greater fin, than an other here mentioned. I take it rather, to be a rhetorical (as faid before) amplification, or aggravation; whereof there might be the more necessity, because many that offend in that kind, by whispering, carrying of tales; (ome, to ingratiate themselves; others, out of an evil custom, and a pleasure they take in prating) and the like, do not apprehend what a fin they commit, nor to what judgements, because out of the reach of humane laws and cenfures, they expole themselves and their families. Neither is in much material whether we translate, feptem, feven; and fo make all the vices, here recorded, equally hateful and abominable; or upon is tacitly implyed, that therefore it is the greater fin, becaule an object of greater hatted: either way, as I conceive, is not much material, because the end of either expression, is onely to make us fensible, that whispering, &c. is no small sin, as many think; but of hainous consequence, and by God himself extremly detected

It feems this way of amplification, by fix, and feven, as it is here, was ordinary among the Hebrews, as appears by Job 5.19. He shall

A lamp is the combinandment, and ble law is light: which in the Original runs very fimouthly, and feetis to imply a reciprocation of light, and law; law, natural, and revealed both thele are light, and law in the Scripand revealed both thele are light, and to fifted in the Scripand. ture. The natural law is, x67 D, reason : and Chrift, 167 D, is faid to be the true light, that inlightneth every one that cometh into the world! which by Calvin and Beza, is Interpreted of the natural light of realon, common to all men. However, I take Solo-mon here to freak of the law of God revealed; as David Pfal, 19, 7. &c. where also we may observe the reason of the coherence, between the first and second part of that Pfalm ; from this place ! the the former fetting out the praises of light, in general; and the later, the praises of the law of God; as being that to the foul of man, what the light of the Sun is to the body. lamp] Or, candle.

And so indeed in this very Chapter verso 29 we find it: So he that goet in to his neighbours wife! whereas I do not remember that she is called wif ellewhere in this Book. However, this is not to make here fin the leffe, if she be not called evil here. There is enough faid of her besides, to make us know her. Nay. I think, thy neighbours wife, (that is, as hath been often faid already i another mans wife : (or, any one, that is not thine :) absolutely spoken, is more effectual to the aggravation of the crime. I would not be thought to feek jefts (1 abhor it.) in a facred subject. I dobe-lieve seriously, there be men in the world, that think fornication and adultery no great fin, fo it be among the godly; that is, fuch as they account (6, by their outward gathe, and minner of speech; nean and women of their tribe and prosedition. But because there be in many other places of Scripture, in this very Book, to convince their madmelle, that are lo captivated to the light of error and delution; we need not fly to this for an argument to make this interpretation of the word, more manifolds. V. o. Hay taithe Heep! The fluggard answers, that he had need of more fleeps and flumber: for flugards never have fleep enough, but ever feek new occasions. This is the most received and, to me, most probable sense. Yet the words will bear another fense, followed by Mercer, and others: which is: Sleep little, (by way of precept or exhortation:) flumber little,&c. Or, A little fleep, a little flumber; a little folding of the hands: to lye down: (or, fleep)

Left that thy poverty, &c. as followeth in the next verse. The sense comes all to one : but there is more emp! afis in the former interpretation. Some observe a gradation in the words : First, fleeping, then flumbering : and (which useft to be the last usually before a man, a lase man, doth rife :) Thirdly, follding of the hands, and all this, to fleep: but better in the Hebrew, 330 to lye down, pro-

Even he it is, the hurst effect they are the properly taken the state of the properly taken to be a superly to the properly taken to be a superly taken to be a superly to the properly taken to be a superly to the properly taken to be a superly taken to be a superly to the properly taken to the properly taken to be a superly to the properly taken to be a superly to the properly taken to the properly taken to be a superly to the properly taken to the prope catcheth fouls. For he it is, that hunts after fouls, properly ; though it may be adscribed unto them also, whom he fets on work, to compalle his ends. However, I think this somewhat remote: and I rather believe, that by precious life, is understood, not life onely, which though it be confumed and corrupted by such actions, yet is which though it be confinmed and corrupted by fuch actions, yet is not the thing property, has whore and flumpures, ham after a but livelihood, or liabflance; which is fornetimes called blood, and life; as hath been need upon the limit of well fee out by ancient Comicks: who reprefent them as very well fee out by ancient Comicks: who reprefent them as very harpyes, or comorants, in point of prey. See, it you pleafe, but largest, or comorants, in point of prey. See, it you pleafe, but largest, or comorants, in point of prey. See, it you pleafe, but largest proportions, to be convicted of it. This therefore must plaute in his Tracellants, which feed words. And therefore among that a better Comment upon these words. And therefore among the present the second of the pres were Comicks anciently faid, to teach; and they, among other titles, called teachers, because of the good they did, by such lively reprefentations, to reclaime many young ignorants, from their idle courses. There be words in that Comedie which I have named, that make to my purpose very much. One laieth to their charge there, that by themy oung men did perire, perish: intending, that they were the destruction of men. Now because that they were the destruction of men. word is more proper to deftruction of the person, or life it self; than of substance: one of the company doth answer: Dieu connan or tuonance, one or the company outcanners of the con-numerium. Men hominum his perire plet appl and is rep predunt four sul perilderum Res, abire hine fi volumi, stijus, licet. The meaning of which words is, (for they are to my purpole;) that it is all der, to fay, that men did perilt there: No, their goods and their der, to fay, that men did perilt there. No, of which words is, for they are to my purpole:) that it is a flander, to flant ment did print there: No, their goods and their of such that ment did perith there: No, their goods and their of their ords, and first because their in the night or day, fets upon men by force, and first because the following their control of their posts are the fallion is of the following the first the night or day, fets upon men by force, and first because the fallion is of the following the first the night or day, fets upon men by force, and first because the fallion is of the following the first their first lives, and then of their goods as the fallion is of and they might go whether they would a they would not hinder inthe most their lives, and then of their goods: as the fathion is of all, they might go whether they would at they would not hinder intheir liberty. So there. But withal it must be known, that in the beauty in the sound in the so and shorten life; yet those horrid diseases, that will make a more pend morten the; yet those notified uncares, that will make a more specified end, and are of a more penetractive quality, were not known or heard of. More unexusable are they therefore, who notwith-flanding such visible destruction to their lives, livelihood, and veflanding fich wishle deftruction to their lives, livelihood, and very fouls, (a s. Chrift and his Apolles fo plainfy teach:) cannot be reclaimed. Precious life, we may interpret, whatforer he doth peffelig; even that which is most precious; goods, lands, and houselfle; even that which is most precious; goods, lands, and houselfle; even that which is most precious; goods, lands, and houselfle; even that which is most precious life, may be, any most maintain this wiked trand. Or, pretious life, may be, any most mis livelihood, or subdance, be it more relife; which is pretious life livelihood, or subdance, be it more relife; which is pretious. unto wife men ; and none but mad men, or infatuated, would unity with men; and nome but mad men; or imaturees, would bring themfelves to begger; that is, to be a forn unto all men; for uch momentary pleasures, more fit for brutes, than men.

V 2, can amn take fire in his beford 1 A very fit smillitude, because a wife, or woman is according to the Hebrew idiotifme, faid to be taken into the bofom, when entertained for carnal copulation, to be taken into the bojum, when entertained for carnal copulation, See Gen. 16.5. Saral speaks unto Abrahum: I have given my maid into the bojum. And Deut. 13.6. the wife of the bojum. Befides there may be some immation of dangerous infination, when the word bojum, is applied unto lewd women. For then, and thereby chiefely, they have the opportunity to do mischief: that is, to obtain what they will: and man then in worfe capacity to make ufe of his wit, and reason, against them, if he have any.

V. 28. Can one go upon hot coales] A man cannot use familiarity with such, or dalliance, but it will turne to his ruine, Judg. 16.

V. 29. So be that goeth in to his neighbours wife] Most ancient Fathers take thele words not of adultery committed; but of outward familiar conversation by way of ordinary friendship and acthe former verfet, addressed his speech to them, who (as doubtless in instance) or to suffer any kind of missey in this verdies, and object the company of some women, not out that to incur the vertach of God by an evil life; that such a one, any cultimental contractions of the company of th of any evil intention or purpole, either to corrupt, or to be corrupted, in that kind : but out of meer idlenesse, curiosity, want of better employments, or happily, fome respect (at least, as they phan-fie to themselves) to their good and (for so is that good word in ne to inemierves j to their good and (for to is that good word in ordinary language profituted and prophaned) vertuous parts. If we fhall to interprete this goeth in, here; then the fense of the for-mer words must be, that as a man cannot take fire into his boloms, nor go upon hot coales, but he shall be burnt: so it is as impossible that a man (fuch a one especially, as Solomon speaks to young and tnat a man (unch a one especially, as solomon speaks to young and lufty, &c.) should long converse (by way of company-keeping must be understoods) with a woman, (especially, if wanton, and beautiful; and conning withal,) but the fire of love will kindle in him at laft, fo that by degrees he shall be drawn to that which at fifthe would not have thought. This is the more probable, because it is very ordinary for all Writers, Poets especially, to ignem home, &c. and divers others. However, I conceive that there is not left ground for the former interpretation; from the context, and otherwise.

V. 30. Men do not despite a thief, &c.] Some would have this to be the sense: Men do not despite a thief: to wie, to let him scrape unpunished; though he be driven to it by some kinde of nexcifity, againg his will. And if not a thief; how much lesse an adulter-But the authors of this interpretation contrary to the current of interpreters, might have done well, to have showed, that the Original word 11-2 is ever taken for contempt in this kind; which, I take, is more than they could. The more fafe therefore and more received interpretation is, that Solomon doth here aggravate the crime of adultery above ordinary theft. The compaciton is very proper, adultery it felf being a kind of theft, and to called ordina rily by Latines and Grecians (jurium, furtive nuplia, 24 ward-nily by Latines at theft of a higher nature; fo, hibject (among the Hebrews at leaft) to much more danger and ignominy, than ordinary flealing. In most places, it was death: among the Athedinary treating. In most places, it was ucasti; among the Athenians, though not death, yet was the punifiment of it very flowing full and ignominious, (712/16), pagarid way. &c.) deferibedby the Scholiaft upon Ariftophanes. But though their was not proman iaid; a tinet is an nonent manyto you for the IRE, Behdes, is doth much qualifie the case (in point of reproach at least;) where apparent necessity, to lave ones life, is the ground. Solomons mind is very well expressed (and it may be seme confirmation to this interpretation we follow:) by an ancient Poet, (though not o ancient as the title pretends,) commonly called Phocylides, in to ancient as the title prettines, j. commonly caused Phocylides, in these words: "Orio kwa dolka", κακό ανής καλ ώνα αναγαης, Όσω κίνα τό τίλο βαλήν ο " ωθονε έκας ου.

Men do not despife] The Civil law doth diffinguish between Fures, latrones, and graffatores: in their guilt, and in their punishment. Fur, properly, is a petty thief, that steales by advantage of the night, or privacy ; not by any force, but flight and cunning : openly, and without any intention to kill. Booty, is their aim, and that they live by. Now when Solomon faith that men do not defpife that they live by. Now when Solomon latin that men done defined a thirty, it would be most proper to understand it of the traffaction (for latiness; they are to be looked upon rather as himistin, than thereves:) who indeed are more properly feared, than defiples: either is their punishment by the Civil law lo great, and abolius thereves. But because of that which follows, of relitation, if he be taken the subject of the civil of ken; it must needs be taken of ordinary theeves, that deal by slight, sen; it must neess set taken or oranisty inceves; usa eats by lieffin nor of them that deal by open force. We lay then, that Solomos words may aim at the lame things, that is delivered by our Savious, where speaking of the unjust flexawrd, who feeing that he should be turned out of his place, and considering with himselfs, that he be turned out of his place, and confidering with himielt, that he was not brought up either to beg or to dig; found a way, how he might fubfilt, when out of his place. An anjuft way it strue, and therefore called the unjuff flerward: he sharmfully and unconfidented to the state of the state tality of the foul: no day of judgement: in a word, whole funmum bonum, or principal end is, in the goods of this prefent world? Therefore, faith Christ, his Lord commended him. Why? Because he did not fit down, like a fool; bemoaning his condition, and expecting that men should pitty him : but as a wife man, according to his principles (wherein confifts chiefest wildom, as Aristotle sheweth, in all our deliberations, to have a respect to our princi-ples:) he did stoutely bestirre himselse, lost notime; and by the help of his wits, found a way to live out of mifery. So may we, as a meer natural man, is more to be commended, than he vyho through want of wit or spirit, can make no shift for his livingthrough votant of wit or Ipitis, can make no that tor unsirving, and all this tends but to aggravate the more the folly and votant of any, that veatles himfelf, body and goodsupon hatlost the one, being hardly put to it by unavoidable neceffity, finish away (though not vithout danger, because of the law') to shift: the other, having pelity of both, a vigourous body, and emperency of yveathy, for vyhich he can never be too thankful unto God; instructions indicated the contraction of t fuffershimself to be ftript of both, and becomes a prey to a leved evenan, who her felf, (in her own thoughts t) judges him a fool, whileft he dotes upon her conceited beauty, at that rate. Who therefore of the two deferves to be more despited? This therefore doth not properly tend, to compare the hainouinels, or greiveoulnesse of the fins, in point of lavy either divine, or human: but onely in point of vvit, and vvorldly vvildom, vhich more or Icfle cipicable. And Cicero doth vvell teach us to diffin-

Contemnuntur it, qui nec fibinec alteri profunt ; in quibus nullus labor, nulla industria, nulla cura est. Which is very pertinent to Solomons words.

V. 31. But if he be found, he shall restore sevenfold] Of a sevenfold restoration, we read not any where in the Law : but of double, and fourfold in some cases; and in others fivefold: Exod. 22. I 4. &c. As therefore feven is often taken for many; so fevenfold here, for manifold: by which word, all those different rellitutions appointed by the law, are comprehended, So most. Some by fevenfold, understand septies, or seventimes: (as Psal. 12.6 purifies seventimes, Thud the word here:) that is, say they, as often as he is convicted, though it be seventimes, or oftener; yet still he can be but put to restitution: his life is not in danger. Sevenfold may also be taken, for plentiful : restitution with good advantage fuch as is prescribed by the law. V. 6. For at the window of my boufe Honked] I speak not without reason, for I have seen the folly of those that have suffered themselves to be abused by harlots. Some make a question, who ther Solomon doth relate those things simply, and historically, or whether parabolically: fo they call it : but figuratively, I think whether parabonians; so they can it is our primariers; stimilitude, they would fay. For here is nothing of a parable, or fimilitude, but a lively reprefentation of the thing it felf, which Solomon hath often infifted upon; the fubrity of harlots, to inrice a young man, and to draw him into their nets: the diffinulation of the one, and the simplicity of the other; with the sad consequent of it. Such representations of things, which bring them (if artificial indeed; or rather, very natural and lively;) to the very fight are called by rhetoricians, evappuas: evidentia; whereof Quintilian hath divers choice examples out of Virgil, and Cicero. Some begin : videre videbar : as if we faid, Methinly I fam, &c. which I think is all intended here by Solomon, when he faith, I looked out of a window, &c. But Theognis, (often named, because of the fame subject as this Book is, and very ancient :) upon the like occasion, in the representation of a prodigal, and a miser; he is as peremptory in his expressions, as Solomon : 'Fy 7316010 d' Erena : I flood, faith he, in a place, where three wayes meet, &c. and then tells you what he faw

That she was (the woman here described) a very harlot by her deeds and actions, is no question : but whether a protested one, such a one as made a trade of it, not so much for her luft, as for her living; a common publick harlot : that which follows afterwards, ver. 19, 20, concerning her husband, though not doubted by any Expositors that I can finde, makes it to me doubtful. My opinion is, (fince I finde nothing about it in others) that the was, if any fuch really, as fome think; but if not really, yet that this description is intended of a common publick harlot: and that what the faith of her husband, as though the had one; or he that the had, were a ftranger to her lewdneffe; it is to be understood, as cunningly and politickly spoken by her, the more strongly and powerfully to incense and ingage the young fool, it being the manner of fuch (as Horace, and divers others observe) rather to defire to commit wickedness with one that hath the reputation of an honest woman, than with a common professed strumper. And certainly of the young man, we man it would must manage. And extrainy that lende may fit luch a woman very well t yea though fibe be granted (as most of that way:) lubtile and etaily too. For there be none commonly, more unwife and foolish, as to the main end, to which all true wissom, or folly is referred; (as we observed be-fore out of Aristotle:) than those that are most subtile and crafty in their ordinary dealings and conversation; to bring some particular ends to paffe, which they make their whole fludy. And to go no further than this very life, and this present world : How miferable is the end commonly, of fuch creatures? and how bafe and despicable, in the eyes of all men; how much abhorred and detedelpicable, in the eyes or all their intermediate and accorded by them that have any fenfe of ingenuity, or generofity, are their couries? Befides daily affronts and feorn from them by whom they live; and in many places, legal punifilments. We fay therefore, the fense is good: but whether their supposition be true, is that which I more question. Two places are quoted for this sense, Es. 1. 8. urbs devastata: or, desolata. Indeed, the yulgar Latine hath it there, civitas que vaftatur : but most other translations, with the Chaldee paraphrafe; obfeffa : or to that effect. So that we can build but little upon this place. The second place, is out of the same Prophet, Es, 65, 4, where translations are very divers: some peluncist fome delubris: the Chaldee, cadaveribus mortuorum : Jun. calfodia: our Englith, monuments. I find none, but Aben Ezra quoted for that fenfe. So that this fignification of the word having no better ground; it will be much fafer to flick to the known, and unquestionable. V. 11. She is loud and stubborn] He sets down some proprieties of an harlot, which agree very well with those descriptions we find of them in ancient Comicks; as that the is clamorous, impudent, unruly, never at home, and the like ! fome of which proprieties are repeated again, Chap. 9 13. but fome there alfo, which may feem contrary: as that the is fimple and knoweth nothing: contrary to what he faith here, in the verse before, that the is subtile of heart. We might answer in general, as before, that all such marks and descriptions of manners must alwayes be read with a reservation, ως έπί Τὸ πολο; that is, for the most part : which supposeth, that the contrary may be true fometimes. See alfoupon verse to: sub-tile. But whether the same be intended there also, as is here spoken of, and described, is a great question : of which, see more

V. 12. Now fhe is without, &c.] He infifteth the more uport this, because in those times and countries, it was not the fashion for honest women to be much abroad, nor without great occasion : as by ancient Writers, Menander, and divers others, doth appear And St. Paul, it feems, would have it the fashion, every where; who among other things, requireth in vertuous and godly women,

V. 13, and kiffed bim 1 It was very ordinary among men (in those dayes; among the Romans especially;) to kiffe one another (being friends) when they met in the way. Martial maketh mention of it, often in his Epigrams: yea and complains of it, because it was a great hinderance to men that went about their bufinefle, to be fo often interrupted in the ftreets. Onely in the extremity of Winter they forbare : or at leaft, they were thought ditcivil, (as by the fame Martial doth appear) that did not then forbear. But that the fame was done by and towards women too, that they killed, and were killed in the freets; I mean civil women of Jaid. V. 14. These peace-offerings with me] Heb. peace-offerings are you me. Some interpreters would have these peace-offerings, he mentioned to have reterence to the young man, as though the ended to fay that she had made a you to God concerning him, either for his good health, or her meeting with him, or both; and should now acknowledge, and congratulate her felf, that she hath obtained her wish; or to that effect. But certainly they are mi-ftaken, that think so. In ancient times, when facrifices were in use, both among the Jewes, and elfewhere, almost all the world over, they feldom did make any feaft, (not fober house-keepers, at least) but when they did facrifice: whence it is, that as the word leatt) but when they and harrines; whence it is, that as the word feelf with us, which properly don't fignifie a bay day, is taken for an invitation, and merry meeting; to farificer in the Scripture is of metrimes (as Frov. 17. 1.) taken for good depart. Hence are those expertions in Comicks, Rem divinam fatio; used as a preface to an expressions in connects, them around just as a perfect of an invitation: and, Sacrificant: dant indeparter majorem mibi, &c. and the like. Now facrifices, among the Hebrews, were of leveral kinds. For in some, (as in Holocausts) nothing at all was referved; but all confumed to smoak and ashes. In others, the Priest had all the flesh that was left: it was his due by the Law. In fome others again, (of which kind were those, that were called peace-efferings, properly: of which we read, Levit. 7. and ellewhere,) the greatest part went to the offerer himself, who was at the charge of the facrifice: and those were the facrifices that caufed invitations and good chear. Here therefore, I have peace-offerings with me, is, in effect, I have good provision at home : this day I make a feaft, &cc.

Which is the religion of many in these dayes, who think if they hear so many Sermons in one weeke, they need no other convoy to heaven, though otherwise very vicious; as malicious. covetous, fraudulent, railers, whoremongers, drunkards, and the like : and fome ministers are well enough content they should think so, who therefore make that a special mark of the godly; (and will not allow that title to far honester men :) because they

V. 20 He halb taken a bag of money] There is no fear of my husbands sudden return; for he hath taken money with him to supply the charge of a long journey. See before upon ver. 10 with the attire of an harlot. Certainly, if this woman had a husband really, and feared he should know what she did, she was (which nevertheless is most agreeable to the description here made of her,) no common professed harlor: it being one of the proprieties of such, to be unmarried ; or if married, yet to have the confent and approbation of their husbands, in what they professe. Now if according to the description in the former verses, a common harlot; and that what she pretends here of a husband, be but a meer pretence, as we thew there; it must be understood likewise, that she was a stranger of another nation, and not a daughter of lirael: it being against the Law, Deut. 23. 17. that any luch should be allowed to make tne Law, Deur, 33, 17, that any tuen thould be allowed to make profetition of that infiancus life. However, it must be added with-al, that the word Deur, 33, 17, is "DDD, which whether it be the fame as "TIM here, in the Proverbs, and in the next vehicle, there, there is fome quefition; and in case the words (as is most probable) be the same; yet from 1 King, 3. 16. and other places of Scripture, but especially in this Book of Proverbs, it may as probably be conceived, that notwithstanding that law, Deut, 23.17 by a kind of connivency, divers that were Ifraelitish women born, were permitted: but separated though from the rest, not onely by the common imputation of proplianeneffe, but also by legal excommunications: fo that they were either strangers, really, and by birth; or held as strangers, in the common estimation of with him] Heb. in his hand. the day appointed] Or, the new moon. We find the lame word, Plal. 81. 4. and not any where else in the Scripture. There tranflated, the time appointed; in our English, as here; the day appointed: but there also, by some, New-moon. The common opinion is, that it comes from 993 which fignifies, to recken, to caft up : to summe up: and so the noune of it, to signific an appointed time, or feason. But they that would have it to fignifie New-moon, they fetch it from TOD to cover, because fay they, the Moon is then covered by the Sun. But there is yet another interpretation of the word, as it may be supposed to descend from that radix, and that is, the feast of tabernacles: more commonly called 7139, from 739 to cover, because of the covering of boothes and tabernacles, wherein it was celebrated. This last interpretation may sit perchance, honest reputation : I do not remember neither among the Romans, Pfal, 81.4. but New-moon, much better here : and better too I am vities; as appeareth by the words of David, 1 Sam. 20. 5. and if a man had occasion to travel, yet it is likely he would endeavour to be at home against such a Festivity. And divers Heathens in imiration of the Icwes, that lived among them; observed those days, and forbare ordinary employments, as may appear by Horace, where the New-moon festivity, is called, triafima Jabbatha.

Or he may meane more generally, that the place whither this young man (though merrily and cheerfully, through his ignorance and folly,) is going, is in very deed no other, than as a place of flaughter to the oxe; or publick flocks, to one that is condemned to them ; who probably publick trocks, to one that is condemned to them I who probably (if he be not very desperate and shamless) goes but heavily to them, to become a publick spectacle, &c. and so would this young man go to a hartots house, as heavily, and more, did he rightly. know whither he goeth.

as a fool to the correllion of the flock;] Heb. as the flocks are for the correllion of the fool. Or, and [to] the flocks, [which are] for the correllion of the fool. This is the order of the words, in the Hebren, which is somewhat intricat : and though our English doth exprese the sense vert well; yet that English, cannot, Grammatically, be made of the words; because 1917 being in regimine, as Mercer well observeth against Aben-Ezra; fool; or, the fool; must go together, and cannot be parted in the sense. Therefore Buxtorfius hath another interpretation of the words: Et sieut [vir] compedia ad eruditionem stultorum. It is very ordinary in the Hebrew, to leave out one of the substantives, whereof the faid Buxtorfius hath collected fundry examples in his Grammer, and reduced them to certain rules. Verse I. Doth not wisdom] This whole Chapter containeth not the praises of wisdom; humane and create, to verse 22. Ry me, &c. Divine and uncreate, to verse 32. Now therefore hear ben unto me, &c. where beginneth, for conclusion, an exhortation unto men, to embrace fo ufeful and heavenly a thing: VVildom her felf, by a profopopaia, under the perfon of a woman, being made to commend her felf: which though among men be not allowable (Chap. 27. 2. and becaule the most perfect, in frict judgement, are but as improfitable fervants : Luke 17, 10 in God, it is quite another thing; of whatloever we can lay by way of praile, is rather his nature, than what we call praise among men : and of whom we can say nothing properly, that may bring us unto fome conceit of his nature, but but by way of praise and admiration. Besides, that the benesit of divine praifes, doth not redound unto God; but unto men, who by those praife come to the knowledge and love of God; wherein is their telicitie. Some Expositors would have Christ to be the onely fubject; but they give no reason at all, but that they think it not convenient, that these two should be consounded, and represented under one person, But when they come to expound the first part of the Chapter, to verfe 22, they swallow far greater inconveniences, and improbabilities, to apply all to Christ's person: and whatsoever they bring: to prove that Christ must be understood, is taken from, or hath reference to that which follows, from verse 22. By me. &c. which we also interpret of Christ. So that all in effect they do fay, is, they do not think it probable; that Solomon would joyn di-vine substantial wisdom, with that which is communicated unto men. Neither indeed doth he. For he speaks of them in order, by themselves. And why not of both, in one Chapter; and under one wildom; fince all human wildom, even that of artificers and tradefmen, is, in the word of God, adleribed unto God? See before upon Chap. if men will read with diligence, and humilitie; and fludy a good conscience (without which no knowledge is profitable) at the fame time. The words also may be translated : They are all st aight, to him that understandeth, as some would have them. And the sense is good, fo too : and more agreeable to the fecond member, All men are not satisfied concerning the justice and equitie of all that they read in the Scripture. It hath made many; some, professed, some, concealed athiests. Our Saviour saith in a place, If any man will doe his will, he should understand his doctrine, John 7, 17.) that is one condition: a man must study puritie of heart, and integritie of life, that will be a proficient in the knowledge of Scriptures; and Solomon faith here, he muft be Dano that underftandeth that is who doth hearrily defire knowledge, and understanding, and doth apply himself to the means, with constancie and sedulitie. The deed sometimes in Scripture, is put for the endeaven, so Genes, 37.21. and he delivered them out of their hands, that is, he did his best to do it, and did think he should. So we may call good water, (when, and where it may be drunk safely; and there be in some places of the world, men and women of qualitie, we know, that drink no other, all their life:) wine, as if one should fay : this is my wine, my claret, and my fack: and of any wholfome ordinary meat, here I have my partriges, and my feafants t which every man would cafily understand. So here, when Solemon doth adscribe wit, and subtitly to true wildom, that is, to pietic and religion; he hath a respect unto the generality of men, who affect wit and subtilty (whence is that of the Poet : Aurum et opes et rura frequens donabit amicus. This yerle doth somewhat interrupt the context; neither doth it properly contain, or concerne the praifes of wildom, what some Rabbins have devised, to bring it to that, may be read in Mercerus: but it gives me little content. But fince we have many fuch interruptions, in this booke. I know not why we should much stand upon it here. It may be thought that Solomon having spoken somewhat in commendation of wiscdome, in the phrase and language of the world; adscribing to it substity, (which is often taken in a bad sense) and the knowledge of witty inventions: which is an ambiguous word too as well as the former : he might think it seasonable intendiatly to infert this of the fear of the Lord, &c. to prevent any either abuse of his words; or mistake of his intention. But this is not very materiall.

this is not very material; pride and arrogancie, and the evil war] Here be two words in the Hebrews (TNN) and [NN) which are but one word, both in sense and sound, as if this word pride we should make, pridness, and pride-(hip. Neither can it be faid, that it was for want of other words. whereby to express pride and arrogancie. More true therefore that it is an idiotisme and elegancie of the Hebrew tongues, thus sometimes by repeating the fame word, to intimate and include all perticulars, all divisions, I mean, and differences of the same kind. So for example, Elay 3 1. For behold the Lord doth take away from Ferufalem, the flay and flaffe : in the Hebrew it is but one word with a little variation of the termination only. But then, what by that repetition of the same word is intended; is immedially after declared, in this, and the following verses; by enumeration of particu-

For the thousand spines, (which some would have translated, riches of juffice; as if there were a regime in the words, but as I conceive not for iginty:) I take to be opported to that which is called by Christ, (and I believe was so comted to that which is catted by Christ, (and Desirve was to commonly). The Mammon durity thresholding, and the unrightness Mammon: (that is, deceitual, transitory, inconstant:) Luk 16 9.11, which words, they that understand of ill gotten wealth and riches; besides that, it is very inconvenient and improbable, that Christ should bid us to be liberal or charitable out of il gotten goods, without mention of any fatisfaction to be made; may be refuted by the opposite member; in the 11 verse, if you have not been faithful in the unrighteous Mammon, who will commit to your truft the true riches? as n the 10 verie that x (500, that which is leaft, (to wit, world) wealth, so inconstant, and so perishable:) to that which is much, or eternal. I like of Beza's translation here very well, who rendersit, Mammena fallace, and I wish the English (fince there ders it, Mamman fallate, and I with the English (fince there is so much ground for it) had been so too: deciriful Mamman, in stand of unrightens Mamman, or Mamman of unrightens Mamman, or Mamman of unrightenosphess, See also upon Chapter 11. 18. a deciriful worker and sine remard. I will not say that it go and wire Nature, the decirifulness of riches, Mat. 4. 19. must be so understood, neither is the same word in the Greek; thought in my bear that sence too that place. Beddes, that justice, (whether by it we understand redshirely, or general uprightness or justice precisely, as the crown or soundstand of the other vertues, it matters not here) had a more foundation of the other vertues, it matters not here) hath a more peculiar relation to eternal life in the Scripture phrase, may appeculiar relation to eternal me in the scripture pirate, may appear by thir speech, the refurred in of the just 1, Luke 14.13 for which John 5.19 we have the refurred in of life; that is, to eternal life; as by the opposite resurred in of damnation dorn appear, Now as by the opponer repurreum of ammation doth appear. Now though we do not so well approve that a regimen should be made of the word here, in point of Grammatical construction, as we said before; yet the sence by the figure called by did duston, (whereof many examples be in Scripture, as, thy forrow and thy conception;

V. 22. The Lord possessing the in the beginning of his way] Much ado there hath been of old about these words, as unto them that are not altogether unacquainted with Ecclefiaffical Histories and Herefies,cannot be unknown. For what is here in the Hebrew יקנני well rendred possessed me : was by the Septuagint translated ixrinal Deity of Christ, took hold of, and made great bost of this authority and the Fathers, most of them for want of knowledge of the Hebrew tongue, were much put to it to answer them; et many answers were devised; but among them all, not many very folid and fatisfactory. Since the Hebrew Text hath been better underflood. most men have been of opinion, that the Greek Translation was most men have been or opinion, that the Greek Frantiationwas right enough at first, but since that, either of purpole, or casually by reason of the affinitie of the words, deprayed; that is, that whereas they had rendeed it. sernore us (with an if from wran poffides: that is, toffeffed me : it had been made afterward, sartes he (with an i from krico: (that is, created me. V.11. The mouth of a righteous man is a wel of life] Chap. 13,14. It alwayes refresheth others and cannot be stopt.

but violence covereth the mouth of the wicked | The fame words, in the originall, we had before, verse 6, but whether to be interpreted here, as there, the different coherence, makes it doubtful. There, violence, as a just judgement; is denounced to the wicked : as bleffings, in the first member of the verse, the reward of the just. Here violence, as proceeding from the mouth of the wicked, is opposed to life, that proceederh from the mouth of the righteous: here therefore, violence, active: before, violence, passive. But as we have it in our English, we make but one sense (without any respect had of the coherence, or context) of both places. Eut the month of the wicked covereth violence, as I concevie, is the truer translation. All the difference is in the word DON violence, whether we make a Nominative, or an acculative of it. The original word may be eit her : and why then may not we take that which will fit the context best ? Now because JOH may fignific miquitie also, some make the fense of the words to be, that it is the proprietie of a wicked man to conceale his faults, or fins, and this is drawne to confession by the papifts, I cannot fay but this may be vvithout any great violence to the words. Neither is it very cleare in what fence the mouth of the vvicked is faid to cover violence. But it may be vnderflood of the vvickednesse of his heart, which he covereth by faire speeches, when he doth intend mischief; or figuratively his mouth may be faid to cover violence, that is, to be full of it : full of oaths, and curfes, and raylings, and the like. Pfalm, 109.18. the wicked is faid, to cleath himjelf himfelf with curfing as with a garment : which cometh somewhat neer, though it be not altogether the same. We have had occasion before to observe it more than once, that the fame word, words, or phrase, sometimes in one and the same Chapter, yea verse, is taken differently.

See also upon Chap. 15. 14. the heart of fools. Secondly, the original word WYD little, smal, properly may perchance as wel, if not better, with his prefix as, which is in the original, be here englished, as nothing, or if you will, more literally yet, (this very word momentum, by reduplication of the first radical, to supply the guttural, of harth pronounciation, coming as I take it, from the Hebrew, megnat,) as a moment: moment taken mathematically, for the left and lowest of divisions; that is in effect, as nothing.

V. 16. A gracius woman retained honour, and firong men retain tibbes] Some, because \(\foatigma\) is commonly taken in a bad sense, would have his the meaning-that as violence and opportion is the way for men to get wealth: 10 meeknedle and gentlenesse, for women to get honour, their chiefest wealth. This might do, if Solomon might not feem fo to approve violence in men, as he doth meeknelle in women : or if there were no way, at least no surer way (which Solomon himfelf elsewhere contradicts) for men to get wealth, than by violence and oppression. More probable therefore it is, that (171) is here used in a good sense, for an industrious, active, flout man : and that Solomon by these words intends to fer down the commendation and proprieties as well of the man, that is mafter; as of the woman, that is mistris of a house and family : of the woman, that the must be kind-affable, meck, gracious : this her chiefest care, and credit: of the man, that he must be painful, laborious, resolute, undaunted, and the like: as also to provide for המסומים (חומים מות מות מות מות מות מות מות מות מות המסומים והור המסומים והורות המסומים והורות המסומים והורות מות המסומים והורות מות המסומים ה man ? To which our Saviour alluding, grounds his parable upon it Luke 11. 21, 22. When a strong man armed, keepeth his palace, his Luke 11, 25, 22. Worn a proof, man a more, reception in passes, in gods are in peace, But when a fironger than he, fall tome, upon him, and overcome him he taketh from him all bit armous wherein he truffled, and divideth his foylet. I believe, if this had been thought of, this interpretation of Solomons words would have given all men good content; and that they had forborn to feek further.

V.17.The merciful man doth good to bis own foul He that is of a bountiful disposition affords himself things needful, which a cruel man doth not: or, he that is good to others, shall receive a reward for it, but he that is cruel, troubleth his own flesh According to the interpretation of the first member; So this second also doth afford a double fense, which may easily be gathered. And so we take flesh here to be tente, which may cauly be gathered. And to we take peip here, to be the same as full-before; by both, the body, or whole person (as of-ten;) being understood. Some by 'NU' would have the kindred, or necrest relations, as wife and children, to be intended. And so the word is taken too, as in Genesis often. So the sense would be, that the cruel or extreamly miserable, rationem nullum habet propinquita-tis; hath no regard of them that are near to him, as by Grotius the words are paraphrased. This also may be allowed. Some Rabbins upon the first, and indeed most literal sense, take occasion to reprove them that macerat their bodies by penances which the Law doth not require. Many such secret allusions there be in the Scripture, which makes me, after Mercerus, to take notice of this observation. V. 26. The righteous is more excellent than his neighbour, but the way of the wicked seduceth them Tr more excellent, here; is by some, (as Mercer and others: and fo by our margin here,) rendred abundant and some that follow this translation, make this sense of the whole (which is agreeable enough to divers other places of Scripture,) that the just and godly shall abound in all good things, when the wicked, through their way, or wickedness, shall erre, or wander for want; that is, in effect, shall beg. I do not see, but this may do well enough; certain it is, that the Hebrew DUM here and by most interpreters, expressed feduceth them, may as well be translated, causet them to erre; or to wander. Yet feduceth them as it is more generally received, so will afford a more general and warrantable sense; to wit, that the way of the wicked first or last, leads them to destruction: or that their wicked life, leads them to wicked opinions, and fedu-

the frace of the wicked is in the transgreffion of his lips, Chap. 18.7. jecth them from the truth, though light before in their faith. And lent, or abundant in the first. But it excellent, Rabbi Konki makes the more commendable, few or none make any queftion : and by confequent, that a righteous man is more excellent than his neighbour, or any other that is not rightcous. What then is the cause, that so sew apply themselves that way, to follow his example? Because they fee, though (Virtua landatur dy alget : as one of the Poets hath it : inflice be commended and commendable, yet most men thrive in the world by injustice. To this purpose see more upon Chap. 1. 32 for the turning away of the simple, --- and the prosperity of fools shall destroy them. The vulgar Latin (which some take upon them to juftific as the most genuine sense: profunde do germane, saith Cornelius a Lapide, which I wonder at :) expressent it : Qui negligit damnum what is excedient, both prefett and future, without taking counfel proper aminum, influe of them, that to blow it, fufficient of others: the fecond of them, that will entertain good counfel given matter of difcourfe (and fo their volumes come to fwell:) how a man matter of difcourse (and so their volumes come to swell:) how a man is bound to neglect his own profit, or advantage, for his friend, or neighbours fake, There may be good use enough of that speculation, but as to Solomons words, I conceive it altogether impertinent.

V. 27. The shothful man restent not that which he rock in hunting]

As if a man fhould fay ; I am not the richer for any thing you ever gave me; the meaning may be, either not the richer, because it did not thrive with me; or, because you never gave any thing : fo here, rofleth not; either when he hath it, lets it spoil, or be lost through neglect and lazinelle : or, refteth not, because through lazinesse he will not take the pains to hunt, or to hunt diligently, and so gets nothing: which, of the two, is the most probable interpretation. In ancient times, before men were incorporated into towns and cities, hunting was a principal object of mans induftry; and it is very likely that the Latin word fludium, came originally from the Hebrew 118 which fignified to hunt. Most likely neverthelesse, (as most are of opinion) that the words are to be taken proverbially, to this effect, that as it often falls out, that they that have taken great pains in hunting, and have got fomewhat, yet through some either sudden chance happing to their own person, as either death or sicknesse; or some other casualty, through which they are bereaved of their prey, they eat not of it: fo it is with the wicked mans wealth, which though he scrapeth and heapeth together with much labour, yet he doth not at all, or not long, en joy. This to be the right meaning of the words, most Interpreters agree: but for the truth of the fentence, it must be remembred. (as hath been often told) that it is enough, if it be so for the most part; or that there be now and then, in every age, fome notorious examples of it: which if there were not, it is not likely it would have become so common an observation among the wife heathen too, who also have divers sayings and sentences to this for it themselves.

A rod for the fosts back, &c., and this sod, here called a rod of pride, be-cause many fools by proud talk (as much as any thing) expose themselves to the lash. Others more probably, by a rod of pride, understand proud scornfull words, words of repoach and contumely, very frequent in the mouth of fools, whereby they firike at other men, as it were with a staffe, The Latines use to fay, virgula Genforia, of rigid and over-fevere judgements and centures. Solo-mon might aym at both, that whilest proud fooles strike at others Atroak, which haply they might have avoyded: according to that of the Poer, cadimus, inque vicem, prabomus erura fagitis. There be allo, who think that fools talk might be called here, a road of pride, because fools oftentimes (as children) speak more freely of great mens faults, than wifer men date do. Which is true enough: the more is the pity. Even a wife man shall be accounted a fool, if he speak freely, though it lye upon him as a duty. However, I do not think this to have been Solomons meaning.

But as he is a faithfull witnesse in very deed, who will not lye; fo he that telleth lyes, let his pretence be what it will, he is a falle witnesse. So many, upon a perswasion grounded upon some outward performances and appearances, (as long prayers, diligent outward performances and appearances; (as long prayers, diligent hearing of the word, and the like,) that they are godly and reli-gious, flick at no manner of unrighteousnesse in their daily pra-ctice, and dealings, and never think the worse of themselves for it: to whom St. John faith, Little children; Let no man deceive you; He that doth righteousnesse, is righteous, (even as he is righteous,) He that committeeb fin. is of the Devill, &c. 1 Joh. 3. 7.8. Or, A faithfull winnesses, &c. That is. V.8. The wistom of the prudent, is to understand his way: but the folly of fools, is deceir] Heb. DID PODIT, translated by Mercerus, Sapientia callidi: by Junius, Sapientia cassui. The matter of this faying, is excellent; and the expression as pithy. There is not any thing, that men ordinarily are more ambitious of, and more heavily (fome fecretly, fome openly), appland themselves in, than to be fubrile, and crafty ; or as we translate, prudent, and worldly wife. Now Solomon tells us, here, what that craft, or prudence is, and wherein it chiefly confifteth, that makes men wife into observe hindel? and the Leab: which two did build the tools. A wife mans craft faith he, is to look into his own actions, and to observe hindel?: and the craft of fools, (or worldly wife men.) buffed fineth &c. Children allo are cause and a second with the fineth second with the first with the f pure? As on the other fide flerility is also threatned, or at least or over-reach, and over-plot others: this is their wildom; this is their wildom; this is their wildom, and that wildom, as thay down, as thay down and the wildom, and that wildom, as thay down, as thay down and the wildom, and that wildom, as thay down, as they down and the wildom, and that wildom, as thay down and the wildom, and that wildom, as thay down as the wildom, and that wildom, as thay down as the wildom, and that wildom, as thay down as the wildom, and that wildom, as thay down as the wildom, and that wildom, as they down as the wildom, and that wildom, and that wildom, as they down as the wildom, and that wildom, as they down as the wildom, and that wildom and the wil godly, to pluck it down, not only by her sterility, but also by her supplyed and interpreted. And so Junius too, Sapientia assuit, est advertere ad viam juam: finlitita autem stolidorum, ad dolum. So that we have here in these words , that by ancient heathen Phylosophers, and others, so much admired wildom, by them confecrated in some of their most holy Temple, expressed in those words, Know thy felf: and by Socrates after wards (whose ordinary speech, and motto, which became very famous in after ages, in-cluded in one verse, "Or lines is unydesign, &c. to this purpose; was; That he that is mife, should be mife at home, to observe his own actions, what just, what injust, what right, what wrong, &c.) surther advanced, for which he was himself among the learned Gentiles; both Romans and Grecians, little leffe than adored; in these words, I say, most elegantly and pithily comprehended. It is a common subject in the writing of ancient Phylosophiers, and they have done so excellently well upon it, that Christians (as many as are able) may be sent to them to learn, and edisse. But with their contumelious tongues, they expose themselves to the especially to what they have written concerning Anacharsis the Scithian Phylosopher, his long fearch for wildom among the Grocians, and his determination upon the matter, and their large Commentations upon it. There be other pallages (fee ver. 14. Their back-flider, &c.) in this Chapter, that would make a man suspect, that Solomon was not unacquainted with ancient Phylofophy; or rather, that ancient Phylosophy hath been beholding to Solomon, Some expound the latter part of the verse otherwife too, which is as agreeable to the Hebrew, and not leffe agreeable to ancient Phylosophy: "hat the folly of foules is deen; that is, say they, the wickednesse of wicked men proceeds from the errour of their judgement. For all men, doubtlelle, pro-pole to themselves the same end, happiness; yea true happiness: for that what they do contrary to that end, proceeds from want of judgement and knowledge, in differing between that which is truly good, and that which is truly good, and that which is truly evill. Or to express it in the words of an ancient Phylosopher ; Whosever sinneth , doth in that decline from his purposed end, and is certainly deceived. And this is decline from our purpose am, and to extrainty accessors. And this is a trained Artificite's doctrine allo, who difference at large and maintains, that he is a good man, who staged keepf is $\partial \text{sign} of all things; and to whom (w kacesor T chaples and issues); but truth of all things dark appear; and again, that a your mais $\partial \text{truth of all things dark appear}$: the tritud of all lungs own appear; and again, that a pron rate of prox they or a 48 most rest; that every naughty man is ignorant. Ethick Nicom, 1.3, c.4, &c. Upon this ground they make excellent inferences against anger; but we will not digrefle so far. Diodar is the man, who commends this fense unto us. See also upon chap. 5. 23. he fhall go aftray.

V. 9. Fooles make a mock at fin: but among the righteous, there is favour] This palsage is very differently expressed by Interpreters. What we have here, Fooles make a mock; is aniwerable to the most usual fignification of the Hebrew word (17), confirmed also by chap. 10.23. It is affort to a foole, to do mischief. And as for the fecond member, there will be found in it a very plaufible (observable in most of these sentences) antithesis, if with some (oblervable in most or titlet tentences) annuments, it wan nome we expound the whole verfe to this purpole; That as fools, being paft all lenfe of goodnelfs, find fome kind of pleafure (linch as it is,) in fin; fo, and much more, there arifeth [187], an inward complacencie, peace, and pleasure to the just from righteous acti-ons, and a vertuous life. But because the same word signifies also to Speak, (properly, to Speak as a mediatour, or interpreter,) some following that fenle, translate, Stulit loquuntur delictum, de inter rellos est benevolentia: (fo Mercer,) and expound, That as the talk of fools tends to give offence, to make bare, &c. or to excuse and palliate offences; for the discourse of the just to maintain good will and friendship. Rabbin Ezra, circed by Mercerus, hath a very different interpretation of the word DWN, and thereupon: grounds a very different sense of the whole verse : but I see so little probability in it, that I passe by it as impertinent. I dare not fay fo of Junius his translation, and exposition, which is not lesse diffay so of Junius his translation, and exposition, which is not tene un-ferent, but more justifiable, if any shall like of it. It is this, Stut-test conciliat reating, Sec. Guillinelle joyns fools, (or, wicked men) together: but among the just, that which is acceptable, (is the means of their conjunction.)

V. 10. The heart knoweth his own bitterneffe] Great is the liberty (and for which, as ancient Phylosophers teach, we owe great thanks to our Creator) vyherewith God hath endowed every manthe meaneft of men, as well as the greateft, in leaving the motions of his heart (in things civil, at least.) not only free, but fecret alfo: fo that it is in our power, (of which good use may be made often: as against our enemies, when we are foyled and the like.) as to conceal our joy, fo our forrow too. But all men have not equal power in that kind. They are accounted wifest, who least beyvray themselves: but most dangerous withall, For they are most capable to do milchief, if they be so minded. But it is the part of a wife man, never to truft (in matters of concernment) any other mans countenance; till he know him very well: and even to remember, that the face of a man is one thing, and his heart to remember; that the taccor a man is one timing, and its literal another; and that ear the fame time when the face is composed to forrow, the hear (chough unwisbly) may be full of joy; and for on the contrary; it is not whilely; that Solomon by the words, might aym at fome fach caution; that men might be wary, it is might aym at fome fach caution; that men might be wary, it is might aym at fome fach caution; that men might be wary, it is might aym at fome fach caution; that men might be wary. night aym at lone fuch caution; that men might be wary. It is politible also that these words may have some coherence of the wich verse 13, 13, and then the chief sope will be to let us know, that many whom we think very happy (in this world, at leaft:) and sometimester apt to envise their happiness, because they live in great plenty of worldly goods, are richly class, taxwell, and form to as daves mercur was prospelabled. feem to us alwayes merry; may nevertheleffe, notwithstanding all this outward appearance, be fad enough, (especially when by themselves, and out of fight) at the hear; and on the other fide themserves, and out or ingut; at the near than on the other near not a few, whom we cither pity, or definite as vyretched and mife-rable, full of comfort invyardly: and more happy in effect; even in this present life, than the former.

There be that make this to be the sense of the vehole verse: That finners indeed shall be punished propor or the vyriote verte. That inners inneced mail to gunnined proportionably to their demerits, according to the rule of juffice; but the juff, through the fuper-abounding goodnesse of God, shall be revvarded beyond measure. What is (as I apprehend it) the most genuine meaning of the words, I have shewed: which may content ordinary readers. For their sakes that are scholars, I shall further observe, the consonancy of ancient Philosophy, if not in the matter altogether, yet with the expressions of the Divine Scriptures. For that is a main point of expressions of the Divine Scriptures. For that is a main point of ancient Philosophy, that a right is detail: that virtue, or the practice of virtue is sufficient to happinelle: and that he only is to be tearmed wife and happy, eni ex feipfo (Solomons word here to be cearmed whe and nappy, our ex jeppe (30)00mons word nere "1900) apia fant omnia que a de bente vivendum fuerant; as Tully hath it in a place. But the meaning is, Lole it, (thy feed, or bread,) as to men; that thou mayeft receive it back try (try see a) or means) as to ment that those may be received after from God, who is belt able to repay thee. So is it here in this drine fentence, wherein the acutenetle of the expression seems to thive with the excellency of the matter. The Grecians of one that did not look to his way in going, were wont to fay, that he did are da not 1000 to 1100 to one Thales, a Philosophier, who being in his way, and keeping his one I nates, a trintopier, who cong in in way, and keepig his eyes fixed (for observation, being a good Aftronomer) upon the leavens, as he went along, fell into a Well; for which he was pretty handsomely flowted by a malapert bondflare of his own, which came to draw him out. The way of life, saith Solomon; that is, The way that leads unto life, or happinesse; is above to the wife. whileft he doth not only lift up his eyes often to heaven, but also and chiefly, whilest he fixeth his thoughts and his heart there; by and cinery, which he are in stoughts and an neutrone; if which he may be thought fo minch the more to exple his body, of dangers that are from below. There may be an angelvisular in the words, in another respect too: if he should (in the literal immediate tenfe) far, that the belt way to avoyd precipies, is to go aloft, which is contrary to common fenfe; the furth way to avoid a fall whether our litera may be in denance, being to these. avoyd a fall, whereby our lives may be in danger, being to keep the lowest way: according to that of the Poet, ----telluniur in altum, ut lapfu graviore ruant : and, Qui jacet in terra non habet unde cadat. Now for the mysticall, or allegorical sense, we are referred to Phil 3, 20, Col 3, 1, 2, which certainly was Solomons aym. I make no question but that by the way of life, he intended at present, so soliton to be that by the way of life, he intended at present, so soliton but that by the way of life, he intended at present, so soliton but whether by TIND, which fometimes signifies a pit, or the grave, or the inferiour parts of the carth, he intended that which we now call hell, or onely destruction in general; may be doubted. It is more likely that he intended. destruction in general. Learned Grotius his paraphrase upon the words, is, Homo sapiens in omnibus allionibus said Deum respicit, nt a periculo serverur. Of the word 'INU see more upon chap 9 last verse : the depth of hell. It is well known , that many Jews and Rabbins have been of opinion, that the godly only should arie, and live: and that the foules of other men, infidels and finners, the state of the st did utterly perifh, as brutes: opposed by Christ, John 7 and 1988-39.
And was not this a thing, by all lober men (though some that like huise could be a considered to the constant of the con like bruits, would be glad of the end of bruits, and that there were nothing beyond death:) to be dreaded, to be utterly extinct and annihilated; when others should enjoy life and immortality? It doth not follow therefore, that if 7180 were dreaded after death; it was therefore known as a place of torment, hy rhem that dreaded it. What therefore is grounded by some men upon these words,

I do not apprehend to be of much validity.

Every man that hath some knowledge of the Hebrew, or is acquainted with Scripture phrase of either Old or New Test, must need sknow, that to answer, is as much, often, as to speak; and might have done in the text, (I think) better, than, to answer: except those that put i there, had thought themselves bound to keep all Hebraismes; which we know they do not. Studieth then to answer, is as much as, will premeditate when he is to speak. It seems that, that inspiration (as they call it : that is quicquid in buccam whether fense, or non-fense:) was not in use, or not well thought of, in those days: especially upon facred occasions: Eccl. 5, 2. Yet weldeny not, but there be some, who, by the advantage of fome natural dispositions and long practice, are able to speak very well without premeditation if need be, which ability of theirs, deserves great commendation; but their modesty more, if in reverence to God, they avoyd to put themselves to it, (whether in preaching, or praying) but when there is great need. This is (hath been I am fure) the most received interpretation Junius, omnes, all men; not, all things; restraining it, (the sense of the words here; I meant) to men only, The difference is not great, But exceptions be made against this translation of the Text; and confequently, against the exposition, as grounded upon it. For the thing is not denied, that God hath made all things for himselfibut this denied to be the fense of the words in this place : Geierus, the laft I have feen, that hath written upon thefe Proverbs, (a man of great difference, and good judgement, for the molt part: a Lutheran:) is much against it. Two things are objected: First, the accent under 179207 - And fecondly, the irregulatily of the affix Pronoun, if a przepóliton, according to our translation, be made of the word. These be incited for contents of the proposition of the made of the word. which might be answered well enough. There be examples of far greater irregularities in many places, which no man sticks at. But the question will be: If the words will afford another more literal interpretation, (that is, without irregularities:) & that interpretation of the words, as good and warrantable fense, or matter: why not to be preferred? This we are now to consider of The translation commended unto us as moft literal, is: Omne operatur Dem ad responsum ipfius: thas is, God hath created all things to answer him : or, to answer one another ; for both are in the Hebrew affixe : or , to lpeak more properly; The Hebrew affixe pronoun is indifferent to either. The Chalde paraphrase is for the first; ut obtemperent ipsi: that is, to obey him. There is no difficulty in this. But from the other translation, the fense that is made of it, is not so obvious: By Junius in his Scholia, (as I find him quoted: for I have them not:)it is fo fet out: sapientissima vi dy ordinatione Dei sic disponi omnia, ut singula ante-cedentia salla consequentibus,&c. that is: That all things by the great power and wisdom of God, are so ordered, that every antecedent deed (or action) and thought, doth answer to the consequent; and every consequent, to the antecedent. I do not well know, what he intended but I am fure that the Stoicks anciently used the same words in the exposition of their Fate, or Destinie. Others more plainly, draw the words to that mutual harmony and confent of all natural things among themselves to their mutual preservation: observed by many, with admiration. But what then for the coherence? How comes in the wicked? Male culps permiffe, responder malum pana immissions saith Geierus, with some other words to that purpose. I must profeffe my felf not much facisfied with any thing that he hath to this purpole, either of his own; or from others. I shall speak what may seem strange; yet no more, I am sure, than what will be made good, (if taken) in the most literal sense. Ancient Greek Philosophers have written much more to the illustration of this fense, than hath been done by any Commentator: This answering of things to one another, they call most appositly; The M nearest an all 1100 positive. yea so necessary, some say, that the world could not subsist without fuch. This is not a place to dilate upon philosophical speculations; neither have I the books by me. For indeed if we take this; (with tome Rabbins, and many Christians) to have been Solomons meaning, why should it be thought more philosophical, than theological? But I have them not; at this time:neither, if I had, would I fo much presume upon the readers patience. Grotius is for this sense coo, Singula Deus Jacit (ordinars) ad id qued fingulis convenit. V. 18, Chaften thy son while there is hope] Chap. 13. 14. & 23. 13, and let not thy soul spare him for his crying] Some, Et ad inter ficiendam eum ne eleves animam tuam : that is, And do not lift the foul (to lift his foul unto any thing ; that is, to covet, to defire, to attempt: a known Hebraisme: as Jerem. 22, 27, and elsewhere:) to kill him. This pleafeth fome, as the most literal, who except against that other, as forced, or not sufficiently warrantable. But it is not fo, as will appear by examining of particulars. First, the same verb that fignifies to lift fignifies allo to fpare, or to forgive; as Num. 14. 19. according to all translations; and Gen. 4. 6. & 13. according to some. So that taking the substantive soul, (which they make an acculative) to be the nominative to the verb ; thy foul spare bim, will be the literal fense of the words. This cannot be denied, What then ? Mion they fay, is not found elfewhere for noyle, or crying. What if it be not? How many words besides, that are found but once in the Bible ? or twice? Besides, though the word, as here pointed be not elsewhere, in this sense; yet with other points it is: El. 14 11 and the noyse of thy wiels. And why may not that be the right pointing and reading of this place also? But that will trouble them more, that would have the pointing to be of the fame antiquity and authority, as the consonants. Let them chuse, therefore ; for either of those two wayes we have spoken of, the word is justifiable in this fenfe. And truly it is much more likely, that Solomon should warne us not to spare, which is done so generally, and the undoing of so many children; than not to kill, which though it happens sometimes, yet rather as a prodigy, when it doth, or a mischance, (so contrary to nature it is:) than as a thing purposed, or intended: not a thing certainly, that any father should be suspected to lift his soul unn; which is an expression of a great longing or eager putsuance after a thing. But lastly, let us quit that controverted (though there be little cause) notion of the word and flick to that which is more common, of killing : yet even so shall we come to the sense that we would have, & avoid that, which they embraces but we think it not fo convenient. And this difference comes from the different exposition of the verb NUJ which we first spake of, and different ordering of the Substantive, Let not thy foul spare him to his destruction ; or, to kill him. This needs no further explication. Onely we may observe, that in this cale, as in many others, noted by many ; Too great indulgence,

He that hath wifdom enough to die well, need to care for no more. But it is a great chance if they that have been ftrangers to it all their lives, find it at their death & if a wicked life, beget a godly death. The defire of a man is his kindnesse? A mans will is to be accepted for the deed, if he have nothing to give, 2 Cor. 8.12. This is a good sense; but much different from that which is made of these words by other Expositors. The truth is, the words are ambiguous ; and admit of more fenfes than one. The defire of a man, &c. that is, faith Mercer, with the most Rabbins; It is the greatest and choisest ornament of a man, to be kind and bountiful; if fo really. But many, because they covet the praise and reputation of it, are very forward in promiles, but fail in performance, Better a poor man, that really performes what he is able, than fuch gaudy undertakers. Such men are very lively described by the Comick; id est genus hominum pessimum, in Denegando modo queu pu-dor paululum adest &c. he sets them out at large Others make this dor pathlam add! Ec, he tets them out at large. Others make the fine, it he kindnefte of many (of the richer fort efpecially) is most covercounfiefic: they give, but it is, that they may receive more. A poor man, that hath little or nothing to give, is far better than fluch benefactors. Such men there be, there is no queftion; too many : Comicks and Poets, if not experience, will tell us. The different exposition of the word TINN is the chief ground of all this difference.

V. 11. Even a child is known by his doings] Children shew betimes whether they be enclined to good wayes or bad; and must be dealt withal accordingly. This is the common exposition. Another is proposed by Geierus, grounded chiefly upon the most usual signification of the Hebr, word 70151 which in this sense, to be known, or to make himself known, (though most lesse proper to the Original verb) is not found any where elfe ; but, for, to carry him-felf in a stranger; to conceal himself, Sec. in divers places. It is this: Even a child can h dignife his doings, That whether his work be pure andright, I thou canft not cafily different.] And if a child; how much more a man? How careful then ought we to be whom we truft ? This indeed is a caution of fo much confequece, as that it can never be too often repeated, or varied in words. Whence it is, that the heathens made an oracle of Epicharmus his words tending to that purpole : Nige, &c. However if we like best of our translation, as more commonly received; yet I am not fatisfied, that Solomons aim was onley to tell us, that even children can diffemble. I rather conceive, that his words might drive to this; to tell us, that a probable judgement may be made of a child or youth, what he will be, when a man, by his education, and by what he is accustomed unto in those flexible years: because, Quo semel est imbuta recens, &c. V. 14. It is naught] He often dispraiseth it, that he may buy it the cheaper. But what the principal aim is is not certainly known. Whether Solomon, by these words, intended onely to reprove the covereou fineste of many buyers, who care not what they say, though never so much against their own consciences, so they compasse their desires. Or whether the inconstancy, or partiality, of mens judgements ; who now commend, because their own ; what they but now diforaifed and flighted, whileft it was anothers. Or whether he would intimate thereby, that we should not regard bare words and thews, because most men can, and will diffemble for their own ends and advantage. Many fuch things may be thought off; but we can not be very confident of any thing, more than what the bare letter doth offer.

So Horace the Poet, having represented one 'Alphins, and old uiter, highly excolling and admitting the happirats of a quiet countrey life, after a long distourte to that end, by which he doth most fiverely fer out the several pleasures of it, according to the several feasines of the year in the end he con-Cludes, Hac whi-locutus fenerator Alphius, Jamjam futurus rusticus; Omnem relegit Idibus pecuniam: Quarit Kalendis ponere. It is also partly from a natural caule; because drunkennels they say, will make a man very thirstie : whence came the Proverb, to adde drunkenness to thirst, Deut 19. 19. of obstinate perseverance in any evil thing. But yet even then, our joy should rather be in reference to Gods glory, (often not a little interested in our deliverance) and the publick good; than out of any pleasure we take at the miseries of others, who though our enemies, must still be remembred as Gods creatures, of the same flesh and blood, as we; descended of the same first-father Adam, and in that respect, (even whilest we rejoyce at their overthrow, because of the consequence) an object of con-passion, in their particular persons. As for particular enemies, though we must be thankful to God for them too, if they were our nemies without cause, and such as might do us hurt : yet our joy must be very moderate and wary; and if we have any generolity at all, their fall will make us to forget our wrongs, (if they have done us any) and rather dispose us to help them in their mifery, than (as it doth some base natures) provoke re-

His conceit is, that Solomon wrote this book of Proverbs in the manner and method of a Συμπόσιου, or Banket-meeting: of which kinde of writing we have some examples in some ancient books, as Plato, Plutarch, and fome others : where fome learned men meeting together, speak by turns, upon some learned subject nothing meeting together, pleak by turns, upon some tearned subject nothing differing from ordinary Dialogues, (a way of writing then much in the but that it was at table, when they did both cat and feak. V. 10. As he that taketh away a garment in cold weather] This fenence doth admit of two contrary fenfes and interpretations; of which, which is the truefly when both the words, and the nature of the thing will admit of either, is hard to determine. We shall therefore propose both, and leave the choyse to the Reader. But first of niter and vineger it must be known; that anciently they were often, and upon feverall occasions (as by the testimonies of feverall ancients, diligently collected by Salazar, and some others doth appear:) joyned together: and in some cases, vineger adds virtue; in others, it takes away from the niter. Now the Hebrew word here used TIVE as it dorth fignific to put on, or adorn : fo alto, to take away. The lenfe therefore may be: As he that puts on a garment in cold weather, and tempers niter (as in divers cases it must, to make it operative, and physicall; or tempers it, to take away the force of it, which Ariffotle faith it doth, being of a contrary nature:) with winegars, so is he that singeth songs to a heavy heart; that is, in effect: as those things, are most proper, and seasonable; so is Musick, or fongs, &c. That musick, in general; and fongs, particularly, that are fitted to that end, to comfort and to revive, may do much with many (for all are not of one temper) to allay forrow; befides what we read in the Scripture to that purpole, as of Saul, 1 ded to, and with Mulick; nor all Mulick of one kind; and there be degrees of forrow too. As true therefore, (to be generally fioken) that Mulick, or finging of longs, (which for the most part are a find) that Mulick, or finging of longs, (which for the most part are a find) that finding flocken of fome one at first, that was not willing, thinny of a light heart; by every unfeafonable to an heart pheart, and to this effect, it feems were Solomons words understood by Six and the standard of rates to this criects, a technowere soundness words understood by Si- on his head that he milit either burn or go some must under rathylic author of Ecclefiafticus; of whose imitation of Solomon, might be occasion enough to make this a proverbial speech, speech as the substitution of t

V. 22. For thou fhalt heap coals of fire apon his head] Pfalm. 40, 10. Thou shalt bring Gods vengeance on his head, and Gods blefling on thine own. So mot interpreters, both upon this place; and upon Romans 12 20, where this Proverb is used or rather, this very passage, cited by the Apostle. So most, later Interpreters, and fo divers, if not most ancients too, collected by Salazar upon this place. But this feems to be too uncharitable an interpretation, and contrary to what in this very book of Proverbs, Chap. 20. 12. & 24.29. and cifewhere, (whereof fee more upon Pfalm 26.50 mil I compasse thine altar, Scc. and Pfalm, 35 4. Let them be confounded, &c.) is commanded. For what greater revenge, or more malicious hatred can there be, than for a man either to wish or to use means, that his enemy may incur the wrath of God; the utmost ute means, that his enemy may incut the wrath of God; the utmost of evils, and most direful imprecations? Divers things. I know, are answered by divers; but nothing that fatisfies me fo much, as 2 Sain Chrysfotomes aniwer; which is, that 50 domon and after lian Sain Pauls intention was not by these words to allow, much lefter command fuch vindicative policy, but because most mean in the part of their course, are incombined for my characteristics. heat of their anger, are incapable of any other reason or consideration, but what tends to revenge; this by way of condescention is proposed unto them for the time, that it they must needs be revenged, and nothing elfe will content them; this is the only way to turn the wrath of God from themselves upon their enemies, not to revenge our selves, but to leave them to God, and rather to require good for evil: that afterwards when the edge of their anger, and the danger of their fury, is taken away; they may be perswaded to do that out of charity, which before they did out of mere policy. But if there be danger in this interpretation, as certainly their is and matter of feandal too; why should not we rather prefer that which may be as proper to the words, and muter for the fine. Which is according to Saint Auflins golden rule, whereof he gives an instance, these very words of Solomon : Si praceptiva locatio eff, an initiance, there very works or automont : I praceptive issue off, faith he, aut flagitim aut facinus vetant, &c. that is, It is be a precept forbidding any lewdn:ffe, or wickedneffe, commanding fomething that is profitable or beneficial; there is no figure in the words, If otherwise it is, a figure. For example, If thine enemy, &c. water to drink. Here goodnesse and bounty is enjoyned: no sigurchere therefore, But in the next verse; For thou shall heap coales, &c. here malice feems to be commanded : Doubt not therefore but that the words are figurative; and whereas they admit of two feverall interwords are ligorative; and whereas they admit of two leverall inter-precations; the one, tending to evil, the other to good it let thy char ity rather imbrace that which is to good; that these coales of fire thou mayest understand to be nothing essentially burning groanes of heavy repentance, whereby his pride is healed, who grieves with himself, that he hath been his enemy, who was fo good as to endeavour his good, whileft he did him evil; So Saint Augustine Others by coales of fire, understand such, by which the sire of love and charity is kindled in the heart. Did not our the me or love and charty is kindica in the feart, Ind an embearts burn: Luke 24 22, in a different fenfe, it is true, but that oo, figurative; and in a good fenfe too. Of a live coals, taken from the alters, to take away iniquity, we read Efay 6 6,7. And the word, here ufed, feems to have particular relation to the altar, or cenier, which from thence was called TITID. But of this metaphor, of coales of fire, that the words may be taken as well in a good, as in a bad lenle, there is no question. All that can be objected is, why these coales should be laid to be beaped upon the head, which why thete coales thould be fait to be beaped upon the beads which founds more like an imprecation, (its sepand) rol, the ancient Grecians were wont to fay) than in the before, (as before Chapele, of the beaped with the proper leat of love and charity. Some think the ground of the fipech might be as way that aneiern Phytians had to cute apoplexies and phrenfies, that proceeded from cold caufes, by applying coales to the head. Saint Augustine indeed, in one of his Sermons, feemes to apprehend it (b). Others would have it a comprehen what from founding and the proceeded proved by a daing were always to a form the most power of the services when the saint was the saint who was a support of the saint who was a support of the saint was the saint was the saint who was a support of the saint was t comparison taken from founders, or casters of metal, who by adding much fire, will make the hardeft iron, or feel at laft to melt. A probable conjecture; but that it doth not fatisfie, why the head particularly, not the heart, or any other part, should be mentioned, But it is a very difficult thing, to give a reason of old Proverbs, when at some times some extraordinary chance, for which no reabefides what we read in the Scripture to that purpole, as of Saul , i i Sam, 16.44, and of others ellewhere, dayly experience may fufficiently faitsife. This fenfe is followed by Junius, and Iome Rain of an Degiven, but that it half to Inpaged, is enought to give interest place of Provers. fomewhat o: other, which of themselves they are most averse from, Such a thing is, when a malicious enemies obstinacie is overcome with goodnesse, and unexpected kindnesse. And doth not Saint Paul himself interpret it so, when he adds presently, (which to me seems to make the business, very clear,) Be not over some of evil, but overcome evil with good ? How is evil overcome with good, but when the malice of an implacable (of himself) enemy is overcome; for that of a for, he becomes our friend? Besides, there be passages in divers ancient authors of best account, so pat and pregnant to this very sense, of overcoming the most obstinate and malicious. By cery terms, or overcoming the most obstinate and matterious. By constant unconquerable goodnesses, that it is very likely the same thing might be intended by Solomon also. There is a very pregnant passage in Xenophon to that purpose. But I will content my felf with one, out of a Greck Author too, but already done in English to my hands : consider, (faith he, exhorting himself to goodnesses, and patience, I that meeknesse is a thing unconquerable, (or, irrelistable; that is his meaning,) if it be true and naturall, and not affedied (or, not seefingly) or hyperiticall. For how shall even the miss fierce and multicious be able to hold on against thee, if thou shall still continue meek, and loving unto him, and that even at that time when he is about to do thee wrong, thou shalt be well disposed and in good temper with all meeknesse to teach and instruct him better? By not a few, this fense, (as literal indeed, as any other:) is most approved: That as a man carries himself towards another; so he may expect to find him towards himself : if friendly, sincerely, liberally, &c. It falls out fo. very commonly: and good use may nersuly, e.c., at rais our 10. very commonly: and good ule may be made of it, by them that are wife. However, the contraty (as in most morall fayings; as before often hath been obterved;) is a strue fometimes, and it hath been the undoing of many, not to know it in time. Some men, (fuch natures there be:) the more they have been obliged, the greater and fiercer enemies they prove. For in this case, though long custom, or natural inclination, may refift for a time: yet at laftithe tenet of best Philosophers will prove true, that: Uoluntas determinatur ab intellectu: the will will be overswated by reason. But it falls out fometimes, that the will is fo ftrongly fet before; and the affections, fo flagrant; that the power of ratiocination being quite blunted and obstructed by it, and them; whatfoever comes to the outward ear, though never fo often inculcated, sticks there, and makes no impression at all, I will not lay upon the heart, but not upon the understanding; and for want of such impression, never comes seriously to be considered of: and in that case, no wonder if all the reason-ing in the world, though of it self never so solid, and con-vincing; prove altogether ineffectual. I speak this of them, that have the power of reason and ratiocination in all other things, but what concerns their amendment, I do not think that Solomon intended here natural fooles.

For totake them barely, as if he intended only to tell us of fome natural things that are unsatiable, is more proper to a Naturalist, (as by some is well observed,) than one that takes upon him to teach and prephofie, verse I. This hath moved some of the Rabbins to leck out ftrange interpretations, and they have found a way to make cohe rence of lenfe between the three verses here following, and those tense or tense between the three vertex nere indicating another four before, from ver, it. There is a generation that originality failure, &c., They would have TIP1 39, by invertion of letters (FIV) or TIPV 10 (against here, not brinding, or bayl-tens). but perverfination, that is, wickedness; and so make these four mentioned infatiable things, to be intended as particular punishments to those four kinds, or generations of finners infifted upon in the former verses. The words may from to differ but little: but the different words is more anference of fenfe, thar is made of these different words, is more apparant, and confiderable. If we fay foot fleps, in the ordinary notion; it is fure enough, that neither , Eagle in the aire ; nor ferpent upon a rock; nor thip, upon the fea, leave any print of either feet, bulck; or body, by which they may be traced. But then say they, how shall this be verified of, the way of a man with a maid: is not impregnation, or being with child (the natural and ordinary confequence) a very fushcient token or argument, by which the way of a man, in this kind maybe known & deleried? They may be though aman, in this kind maybe known & deterred? They may be thought to fay fomewhat: but upon further confideration, the objection will appear but weak and impertinent. For the quedition is not of confequents, (whicher prohable or necessary), which antecedent actions may in time be discovered; for for it may be objected of the reft, as for example, if a septent pathe by, though he mayence be known by his foot-steps, yet by fome noyle, (shital lambeant singuis with antibus or at in the Poett.) or by some effect of his freezemble, or the like he may necessary and after the rest in the second of the secon neffe, or the like he may perchance : and fo of the reft : but of cergain fignes and marks, in the place, in the nature of tootfteps. But this will bring us to a physicall confideration, never (though han led by many Physicians and Naturalists, at large;) to be determined; who her there be any certain natural fignes of virginity, by which a maid may be known from her that is not. As for thole fignes mentioned in Scripture, most agree, that it was by a speciall dispensation of od, for a time, and no general case otherwife. They that will be fo curious, as to defire further refolution in this particular, may read (not to mention others at this time:) Joh. Ferevonici Epiftalicas Queftiones, where they thall find this matter agitated both by a Physician, and a Divine; both learned men : yea and this very place we are now upon , confidered of upon this occasion. Now those that are against this translation of the word, by westiginm, or footstep; and maintain it must be, was:
(the most literal, to the original word:) they are put to it to tell us, what it is that is so extraordinary in the flight of un Eagle, &c. that Solomon should here insist upon them, as things of fuch abstrusencie, and not to be comprehended by the wit of man. Of an Eagle, they fay , because of all birds the onely flyeth ftrait upwards : of a ferpent, because of his swift motions without feet ; of a fhip, because of her ftructure , mafts , fayles ; and especially her rudder, by which so vait a body is guided and turned at will; and lattly, for the way of a man in a maid, they tell us of some mysteries, affections, passions, secret wooings and communications, by which the most watefull are often deceived. I will forbear further arguing t and deliver my opinion as brief-ly as I can. When I have well weighed all circumstances and particulars; what is faid by others, and what my own judgement doth luggest unto me; my opinion is, that of the three first par-ticulars, being but an introduction, as it were, to the last; footftebs will do best t of the last, wayes. I conceive that Solomon his aym was, to fer out the fecret wayer of young lovers, (not easily to be difcerned or prevented by the greatest care of parents, or others, that have charge of them;) by things that have foine affinity, in that they leave no print, or footilep after them; and confequently, to warne such whom it might concern, to be the more careful: not to trult words, countenance, protefiations, and the like; but according to the custome of those times and places, to keep their virgins out of all fight, and accesse; which places, to keep liter virgins out of all light, and accelle; which irom this very cultions of clote keeping, and recluifeantleft, were called TIDATy in the Hebrew tongue Many fuch warnings we may finde in ancient Authors. And there may probably be those emphasis here in the very word TIDATY Bolomon intimating by this word, that though wirgins be retuly, a dout of fight, according to the ordinary cultome; yet for all this, if there he not fome extraordinary care and observation; a man may find a way, or make his way, to compasse his designes. Of the secret waves and communications of lovers, besides Comicks; Ovid. De arte amandi will fufficiently fatisfie them that defire further Satisfaction. And as for the nature of love, in reference to secrecy there is an ancient inscription in some part of the world, which beginneth Alia Lalia Crifps : written fo mistically and

The Words of the Preacher] Some read it as a proper name, the words of Koheleth ion of David, and so would have it to be one of the names of Solomon as Jedidiah, 2 Sam, 12, 24. Lemuel, Prov. 31. 1. It is usually our of the Greek rendred Reclefiaftes, or the Preacher : as if Solomon had publickly delivered it to the Congregation, (as vve find fomerimes Kings and extraordinary persons have spoken to the people in their Church assemblies, 1 keg. 8. 1.
12.) But it seemeth chiefly to signific Solomons repentance, and 12.) But it feemeth chiefly to fignific Solomans repentance, and remulting himself to the congregation of Gods people, from whence by his idolatries and other aportance he had departed and for the fine is, The words of the following period on orgetzed orgenthered unto the Church, or congregation of Saints, Pill 396, with the first of the fon of David, King in Jeruslam, Some were not to the fon of David, King in Jeruslam, Some were not to the office of the fon of David, King in Jeruslam, Some were not to the office of the fone of the fone of David, King in Jeruslam, Some were not to the other standards of the fone of the fo affemblies of the Saints, by joyning themselves to other gods, Now here Solomon doth by serious and solemn repentance return into the bosom of that congregation, from which by his idolatry he had departed, and turned his heart from the Lord God of Israne man departeo, ann curnen nis near trom the Lord Osdo Jin-reel, 1 King I1.9. And doth therein, and thereunto declare the vanity of all other wayes, fave onely the fear and worship of the Lord, unto true happlnesse. And herein he imitates this subter David, whose name is haply here for that cause mentioned, that is David being converted did publish his repentance unto the Church, in that folemn penitential Plaim, Plat. 5t. So his fonhaving fallen from his integrity, did take the fame course to give gory to God in the great congregation Pfal. 40. 10, and to make known his repentance to all the Church, that thereby he might glorific God, and firengthen his brethren. Whence he frequent in this book giveth himfelf this title, as of a penitent convert, chap 1.11. & 7.29 & 12.8.9,10. The word is a Participle or Adjestive of the Feminine gender, ver joyned here to a verb maken-line, as elsewhere to a verb feminine, chap. 7. 27. There, be-cause it is faid, Gen. 49.6. My glory, be not thou united unto their affembly; the Noun is masculine, the verbe feminine, to fignific that by verbs and Canticles: Though it be not necessary to be curious in questions of this nature, yet this may be inoffensively conjectured; r. That he seems hereby to intimate, That by his former sins he had as it were forsited his name of Peace, and so we find that by reason of those his sins, God stirred up adversaries against him, I King. 11 14, 23. 2 To note his sincerity, who now chose to be known rather by the name of a penitent convert, than of a peacea-ble Prince, as if he who had troubled Ifrael by his fins, did no longer deferve his name of peace, as the prodigal faid to his father, I am no more worthy to be called thy fon, So in Scripture, men have taken new names sutable to a new condition, Gen. 32, 28 have taken new names lutable to a new condition, Gen. 21, 28, Ruth. 1, 20. Mark 3, 16, 17. Nehem 9, 7. The other additions likewife to his name of penitence may feem to be looked on by him as agggavations of his fins. 1. That he was the fon of David, a godly fathers who had given him fitch holy education, who had provided him materials to build Gods house, and greatly encouraged him to advance the worthip of the Lord; who had been an example to him to take heed of falling into große fins, that the ton of such a father should fall so fouly. 2. That he was a king on his fathers throne, and that not by right of inheritance, but by special defignation from the Lord, who had fingled him out above his brethern, and had appeared unto him twice, and gave him wildom and princip endowments for fo great a place, that he flould defile the throne whereunto he had been fo gracioully advanced; and from thence give roal! the propels fol and a reample of fenfalairy and apostacy. 3. That he was a king in Jerusalem, an holy city, where was Gods throne as well as the thrones of the house of Da vid; that he should defile the Lords land, and his dwelling place These were considerations worthy for such a penitent to have his I field were confuserations worthy for facts a pentient to have his eyes on, for his greater humilitation. Thereby teaching us, 1 That the fins of the child are greatly aggravated by the godlinefie of the parent, Jer. 22. 15,16,17, 2. That the fins of the child are greatly aggravated by the falls and mildearriages of the parent, Dan 5,18. and priviledges of those that committhem, 2, Sam. 12, 7, 8, 9. Deut, 3. 1.3.—19 Amsz. 9.—13.3.2. 4 That the greater the person is that sinneth whereby the sendal to the Church is likewise the greaterythe more solemn ought his repentance to be, Numb. 12. 14, 15, 16. 2 Chron. 33. 1 , 13, 15, 16, 18, 19. 5 That the power of grace is exceeding great, which can lubdue the hearts of the greatest mon, unto the heaviest yoke of publique and solemn repentance, 2 Cor. 10. 4, 5, 6. And further, from the description of the person, and his writing of this book; we may deferment of the perion, and nis writing of this book; we may observe, 1. That eminency of wildom without the continued affidance of grace, cannot keep a man from grofs and foul lapfes. Never a wifer man than Solomon, and never any Saint fell into more foolish lusts, God is pleased somtimes to suffer men to fall into such fins, the contrary graces whereunto they had most eminently been adorned withall. As David, a most spiritual man into fleshly luft; Lot, whose righteous foul had been yexed at the filthy converlation of the Sodomites, into another fort of unnatural impurity by incest with his daughters: Joh, into impatience: Moses, the meek eft man alive into great passion of mind Numb. 20, 10. Peter, the boldest disciple, into base fear and cowardise of spirit, in denying his mafter. 2. That hight of honour and abundance of wealth, are fore fnares and temptations, even to the wifest and most excellent fore mares and temperations, even to the wheet and most excellent men, Mark to 23, 25, 1 Tim 6.9. Islaid 39, 1,2, 3. That repen-tance fets a man most against that evil, by which he had most dif-honoured God, and been folled under temperation. Abundance of knowledge and treasures drew Solomons heart too far from the Lord, and being converted, he sets himself most to discern the emptinesse and vanity of them. So Zacheus, Luke 19. 8. And Mary Magdalen, Luke 7, 37, 38. 4. That the Lord maketh the salls of his Servants very beneficial unto his Church; Davids fall was an occasion of his penning some excellent Psalms, and Solomons of writing this excellent book, setting forth the vanity of those worldly things, whereby even wife men are, many times, drawn away from God. 5. That the Saints, after some great offence given by their falls to the Church, make it their bufineffe, upon their repentance, to do some more notable and eminent service to the Church : as Peter, who had been most fearful in denying Christ, was after most forward in preaching him, and most bold in the profession of him,

V.3. What profit hath a man of of all his labour which he taketh under the fun?] Os, What remaineth and abideth with a man of all his labour? What is added to him, or what more hath he by it? of his labour] The word imports toylfom and troublefom labour, and fo rendred by the Septuagint, ωρχ 3 @ ; and by Aquila, κόπ @ under thesun This may relate to either passage of the verse; either, what remaineth to a man under the fan; that is, nothing under the fun wil tarry or abide with him Or, Of all the labur which be hath labou. red under the fun; do in relation to worldly matters here below. There is a conversation and a labour in order to things above the funswhich wil remain with a man, and profit him, Phil. 3.20. Col. 3.1,2. Joh. 6:27. But labour in earthly things wil not do fo, We are faid to labour under the fun, because earthly labour is done by the light of the fun,Pf 104 22,23. Joh. 9 4, and because by that light we are more comforted in the frution of worldly things, as Ecclef, 11.7. and because the benefit we expect from our labours, is wrought inftrumentally by the warmth and influence of the fun Deut. 33. 14. Here then the wife man proveth his general proposition. What foe-ver is unprofitable and perishing is very vanity: all things under the fun, about which the anxious and toylfom labour of man is converfant, are unprofitable and periffing, for nothing of them wil remain unto him, or abide with him. Therefore they are al vain. And this he propoundeth by way of interrogation, which maks the negative mo e unquestionable, as appealing to the conscience of every man, and challenging any man to disprove it. The Scripture usually denies it is not to be found in any thing under the fun. Secondly, affirma- more emphatically by way of interrogation as Gen. 30.2.2 Sam 7. tirely, that it is to be found onely in God and his service, For sempared with 1Chro 17,4, Mar, 16,26, Zech, 1.5. The fam is this; 1, Whatever fruit we have from wordly things, we get it with very hard and toylfome labour; cither of the mind or body. Gen. 3, 17. 19, 190 5, 7. 2. However that labour be ultimated and toylfome be under the mind or body. Gen. 3, 17. 19, 190 5, 7. 2. However that labour be ultimated and fubbrevient to our temporal condition, any happy, they never will, because they do minister but the fame comforts again.

4. Mortality and mutability here is as naturall to man, as standing to the earth, the motions of the fun, the circuites of the windes, the flowing of the Rivers: fo that yet it is wholly unprofitable in order unto happinels. 3. The founit is as impossible for him to be happy by creatures on carth, as dation of this unprofitableness, is; 1, it doth not cause a man to excell, it adds nothing of reall we th unto him at all, it is to alter the covenant of day or night, or to stop the regular and invariable courses of the Heavens. 5. The sun runs his course, observe his time of rising and setting, and though James 2. 1 ---- 6. Ecclef. 9. 14. 16. Pfal. 49. 12, 13, 20. 2. It doth not abide with him; all the comfort it brings, is dying comhe fet, he rifeth in equall glory again, but when man goes, he returns hither no more, Job 14, 7, 12. 6. Observe the constant and steady obedience of other creatures, to that law of fort; it stops at the grave and goes no further. Now nothing is profitable to a man which he cannot transport heyond the grave, which he doth not carry with him into another world, Job 1 working, which was primitively implanted in them, they act as 21, & 21, 21. V.4. One Generation greth, and another generation cometh, but the earth abideth for ever] By Generation is meant the time wherein a body of men do live and continue together, to we read of this or that generation, Luke 21, 32, Heb. 3, 10, the fecond, third, or that generation, Like 21, 32, 100, 5, 100 the recond, third, tenth generation or ages of men yet to come, Deut, 23, 2, 3, 8, A mans own generation, or the age wherein he liveth, Acts 13, 36. There is a constant succession of men to one another, a fixed time, I here is a contant nuccettion of men to one another; a fixed time, as the dayes of an literling, Job 7. 1---10. & 14.14. The inward principles of change and mortality are alwayes working, and life is like a fhepherds tent, which doth not continue in one place or flay, Hatan 68.12.

But the earth abideth or flandeth for ever Continuerh much longer than the men that are upon it; for ever, noteth often a long time, fo long as the present courte and order of nature is to continue, to nue, Pfal, 119, 90. fo long as fuch or fuch an administration lasteth. Gen. 9.12. 1 Sam. 2. 30, 1 Sam. 13. 13. otherwise we know the earth is to be changed, and in some sense at the least to passe away, as now the inhabitants thereof do, Matth. 24, 35, Plal, 102,25,27,
There feems to be a double fense in the words, both Consonant to the present argument. 1. That man cannot be happy by any thing the present argument. 1. I have man cannot be napply or any thing which is here below, in regard of his transforty condition, fathers going, and children sinceding, a mans labour haply may enrich him, or bring him to chonour, but it cannot lengthen out his debyond one Sentration, and then he and all his a equirements must beyond one Sentration, and then he and all his a equirements must be some of the sentration. beyond one generation, and then be and at 1 ms acquirements mult part, and in this respect the earth on which he treads, is in a better condition than himself, for it abides to the end, 2. Man seeking happinelle from the earth and earthly things, must needs be dispnappinette from the earth and earthly things, mult needs be difap-pointed of his expectation, because he passeth away, and the earth Raies behind him. If he could earry the earth along with him, he might happly promise himself his wonted contennent, but the earth abides where it was, when he goeth from it, and can enjoy it no more, Job 7,12. Pfal. 49. 17. Here then we may observe. First, a determinate time prefixed to the life, states, honours, offices of a determinate time prenaga to the lines trates, nonours offices of men; at utermod, they are but of one generation, wherin every man hath his fewice odo, his warfare to accompilin, his race run, 109 7. 1, & 24.5.1. Cor 9.34. Phil. 31.4.2. Tim 47. Afte 13. 6. Secondly, the providence of God, in continuing the feveral 36. Secondly, one providence of Jose, in continuing the leveral faceeding ages of men, that he may fill have a feed to ferve him, that one generation may declare his works to another. That the admione generation may acciate his works to another. That the aumirable contexture of the works of providence, carried along bypieces, through various fuccellions of men, may at laft most giriously fer forth his wisdom, justice and goodnesse, Plalm 22, 30, 31, and 102.18, Ifaiah 38. 19 Ecclef. 8.17. Thirdly, a mans labour under the fun is for himfelt and his posterity; but his labour about heavenly things will abide with, and benefit himself for ever. Fourthly, fo long as the generations of men continue, fo long doth the Lord by his decree continue the earth for their supportance and salvation, because he hath given it to the children of men, Deut, 32. 8. and when the generations of men are ended, it shal then appear o. and when the generations of mentate chart, it may then appear that the whole Creation was subject to vanity, and to the bondage of corruption, Rom. 8 10. 2 Pet. 3. 5, 7, V. 5. The sun also ariseth, and the sun goeth downe, and hasteth to the place where he arase] Or, panteth towards the place. A metaphor from one who runs earnestly to some mark, or present forward with strong desire to something it would attain, Psalm 119. 131. Job 7. 2. A like expression, Psalm 19. 6, 7. & 104. 19, whereby is fignified an unwearied, yet constant and regular motion founded in a covenant or ordinance of heaven, Jer. 31, 35, 36, & 33, 10. Job 38, 33, from which without a speciall and extraordinary restraint from God (as John 10, 12, Ifa, 38, 8, Job 9, 7.) it never varieth. Having thus affirmed of all things under the sun, that they are vain, he here beginneth with the fun it felf, which doth as it were weary it felf out of breath, with continual motion, I. If it did bring happineflet to a man in its rifing, it would remove it again in its fetting.

2. Though the earth abideth for ever, and the fun moveth regularly over it with its warmth, and the winds blow on it, to refresh the fruits thereof, Cant. 4. 16. and the waters passe through it to make it fruitful, Gen. 2. 10, 11 yet all this can benefit a man onely in his own generation, but connot convey any durable happinesse unto him, 3. The earth abides alwayes alike,

V. 6. The wind goeth towards the South, and turneth about unto the North, Scc.] As the fun, so the winds have their confus, whereby is noted the uncertainty of outward things, if they please the matter of happiness must disquiet in their departing, whereas the matter of happiness must be ever present, and permanent, Here we may also note the wife providence of God in the circuites of the winds and other fublunary creatures, which he bringeth out of his treasure and directeth as it pleaseth him for the uses of men. one while making them helpful to one part of the earth, and another while to another, Plalm 135.7. Job 37.7. & 38. 22. Jer. 10. 14, Deut 28, 12. Plalm 78. 26. Gen. 8. 1. Exod. 8. 1. & 14. 21. He seemeth likewise to have respect to those windes which in some parts of the world, have a very regular and uniform moriin Jone parts of the world, have a very regular annumorm morting of in forme months of the years blowing conflantly out of one quarter, and in others, our of another. The world feming in whitting about, returning 1 are used to five whe refiles, and unquier nature of these things, their busic and speedy motion, as if they were ever out of their place; all which shew how ful of vanity they are, and represent the disquiet agitations of the mind of man, till it fix upon him that is immutable.

V. 7. All rivers run into the Sca, yet the fea is not full: unto the place from whence the rivers come thither they return again | Though not filled, fo as to fwell above the earth, or overflow the bounds within which God hath decreed it to flay, Job 38. 8 .---- 11. Plal, 104. 8, 9. Jer. 15, 22. The reason whereof is, because there is a perpetual and proportionable return, as sast as by some channels, perpetual and proportionance counts as fair as of some channels, waters go from their fountains to the fea, by others, they return from the fea, into the earth again. Thus, which way ever we caft our eyes, we every where meet with evidences of inconflanty and our eyes, we every where meet with evidences of montaney and murability here below, as teltimonies of that vanity which all things under the fun are subject unto. I. By the continual motificial motification of the continual motification of the co ons of these creatures, he seemeth to describe the restlesnesse of the onsortness creatures, he seement to determ the renements of the mind of man, in enquiring after good, 2. The diffarisfaction which it every where meeteth withall, finding no reason to reft or flay there, whither it had formerly hafted with greatest speed, As all rivers cannot fill the fea, fo all creatures cannot fill the hears of man It moves every way, forward and backward, to the South, and to the North, from one content unto another for full fatisfacti on, but can finde none, Pfal.39.6.& 74. 11,19. Prov. 19.21, Luke

v. 8. All things are full of labour, man cannot utter it: The ve is not faitified with feeing, nor the ear filled with bearing I All things, to wit, all these and the like things. This is a close of the former argument. Having thewed the unquiet motion of fun, windes, rivers, he here concludeth his Induction of particulars, with a generall affertion, that as it was in them, fo it is in all things elfe, no man is able with words to run over all particulars, but as it is in some, so is it in the rest which cannot be numbred. They are faid to be full of labour, or wearinesse, because they weary out man in his studies, and edeavours nene, because they weary out man in his studies, and ceavours about them, Genef. 3, 17, 19. Plalm 127. 2. Here is also another arguments, proving the main proposition, whatever things bring toylfome labout and wearinesse with them, cannot make a man happy, but are altogether vaine, as to such a purpose; But all things under the fun do bring unto him that is conver-fant about them toylfome labour and wearinefle, therefore they cannot make men happy. This toyle and wearinefle doth not onely appear in grievous and umpleafing labour, whereano men are againft their wils compelled, Job. 5, 7. Lament, 5, 5 lecem 20, 18, not onely in those labours which the Lord is pleated by the Lord is pleated by the Lord in the Lord i led to blaft and fruftrate of an expected end, when men labour as it were in the fire, and reap no fruit of all their pains, Habac, 2. 13, Hag. 1. 6. Levit, 26. 20 Islash 17, 11 & 57, 2. Eeelf, 5, 16. Luke 5, 5 But li sa afform of those labours which a man fees about with greatest delight and willingness, they also have man fees about with greatest delight and willingness, they also have meaning and the same me man fets about with greateft delight and willingseffe, they allo have wearinefs and fatievy attend on them, the very honey comb bringsth a loathing with is, Prov. 3.7.7. And this general he proveth by a double inflance. The get in on fairified with legin, while the ear with barring 1 and accordingly, it is in all other number of the provided of the provided by the provided by the service of the fets particulars. A man may cloy and the out these facilities before before he can at all farisfie them. He feemeth to instance in these rather than others, 1. This was the end of his enquiring; it was not to drown himlef in fenfuality, but to difcover what kind of courfe was that, which would render this prefers mortal life more comfortable to a man. He did it not vitiously, but to make an experiment only. Solumn found in him felf emptiness and indigency he felt strong appetitions after some good which might supply those wants and he had active princigood which might supply those wants; and ne mad active principles of reason to inquire what that good was, which nature did so much want, and so greatly defire. And this reason and habitual wisdom he imployed to the uttermost, to discover that good under heaven, which might most perfectly fatisfie the wants and defires of the reasonable soul.

Here we observe; I. That in all these inquiries Solomon begirs Here we oblever; 1. That in all thele inquiries 500mon begins with his heart, thereby noting unto us, that the good which must faitife a man, must be ar proportion to his heart, and to his inward man. 2. That he tempers his pleafauters and his pains in feeking knowledge, to goether; teaching thereby, that the right use of pleafures, is not to take up the the whole man, but to mittigate the bitternefs, and pains of feveral fludies thereby. 3. That a man hath never greater need of the bridle of wildom, than when he is a suppliance of canal delibers. 4. Than relatives and obligate math never greater need or the order or widom, than when he is in purfusince of carnal delights. 4. That pleatures and folly revery neer of kin; and a very hard thing it is to hold folly forful in, but that it will get loofs, and immixe it fell in earnal delights.

That a free and full indulgence unop pleafure, though not upon sensual, but critical and more curious aims, will by degrees steal away the heart, and much abate more spiritual and heavenly deaway the neart, and much abate more spiritual and nearemy de-lights: corruption ever creeping in with euroifsty, frow, 20.1, & 3,3,6. It is a noble and high frame of spirit to look out in ever thing which a man undertakes, after that which is truly and prin-cipally good for his heart, in the use of that thing. 7. That the comfort of a mans life under heaven, is to the doing of that good which God hath given him his strength and life for. 8. That nothing is truly the good of a mans life, which is not commensurate in duration and concinuance thereunto, and which will not properly minister comfort unto him, into what loever various conditions of life, as ficknels, overty, bond ige, disfavour, old age, &c. he may be

V. 1, And tuned my fill, I Here Solomon doch noce more feriously apply himself as he did before Chap. 1, 17, to take a view of wission and folly. Because it might haply be objected, that are the first consideration of them, he might let many things slip, which were of weight and moment in his prefers inquiry. Because feed thoughts, and folems review of former studies, may haply begre former truth action. And slicens were sold throughts, and the many things slip, which we have the supplied to the suppl fome retractation, and discover some error : The later day being usually the disciple of the former; and we use to say, that the second thoughts are the wisest: therefore when the Scripture will pur a thing beyond the question, it sayes it over again,

There is nothing more usual in the contrasticts of the contrasticts Solomons Proverbs than this kind of antithesis, to put contraries together for mutual illustration.

for what can the man do that cometh after the King] Here man and King feem to be opposed, what further progress can any private man make in this disquisition, than I who am such a King? This is a prolepfis or answer to a tacite objection, for it might be faid, it was a high and bold attempt for one man out of his particular experience to pass so confident a sentence of vanity, and vexation, upon all wildom and great works. To this he anlivereth, that no man after him could do more in this enquiry, than he had done, who was so eminent in wisedom, in power, in industry, who was as it were fitted and firred up by God unto this bufines; and therefore fany man after him thould fet about the fame work, he fall do no other thing than that which the King had done before him, This appears to be no arrogant boaft in Solomon because the Scripture testifieth the same of him, I Reg. 3 12. The man who will not believe it upon my report, but will make triall of it himfelf, if he will go with the lame wiledome and integrity about it as I have done, shall find the same vanity in the bottom of every creature, as I have found. So here are two reasons why Solomon challengeth belief in this point, 1. The advantages which he fo great a king had not onely viewing throughly onee, but reviewing again the things upon which the pafied fuch a judgement.

He ruth of himself touching the gifts of God bestowed on him, and to mention his own experiences, onely ayming therein at the glory and truth of God, and the edification of the Church, is no arrogance, or violation of modelty, but an improving of Gods gifts to the ends for which he gave them, Chap-

v. 13. Then I faw that wifedome excelleth folly, &c.] That there is an excellency in wisdom more than in folly, &c. This Solomon confesset, that indeed there is a great difference between wisdom and pleasures, that being many wayes more excellent than those; and therefore though the study of wisedome be not without pain and forrow, Chap. 1.18. yet it is not therefore to be rejected. Wifeand fortow, that, I to yet manner good, as the word here imports, whereas pleasures do perish in their use, and nothing stayes behind them but the sting and forrow. The forrow of wisedome is in the getting, but the forrow of pleasures is after the using, and enjoying of them. It is true, wiscdome and knowledge are vain, in order to a higher and nobler end than they bear proportion unto, viz, to make man truly happy: yet they are of excellent use, and fingular ornaments to the foul which hath them; so the Aposte though he tell us that charity is more excellent than gifts, the one ferving for edification onely of others, but the other for fanctificarion of a mans felf, yet acknowledgeth that they are all operations of Gods Spirit, and bestowed on men for very profitable uses, and or Gods Spirit, and behaved on men for very profitable lifes, and accordingly to be earnefly defired, I Cor. 12. 4,7,31, & 14,1,39, yet we are so to esteem gifts, as that we prefer salvation and happinels before them, Luk. 10.20.

As far as light excelleth darkness] Wisedome to the mind being as light to the body, and therefore the Rabbins called their wife men the light of the world; as our Saviour his Apostles, Matth. 14. Light is many wayes comfortable, it shews things in their di finet forms, it discovers any thing hurtful, that it may be avoyded, or beneficial that it may be embraced, whereas darkness confoundeth all things, and exposeth a man to many dangers. Light is plea-fant in it self, Ecclel, 11. 7, and it is metaphorically used to express lant in the test section in the increamon than y the content of the most excellent things, as joy, Pfalm 97.11. Efter 8.16. liberties and deliverance, 16.9.1. Glory, 1 Tim. 6.16. Prosperity, Mic 7.9. Life it felf, Job 3.16, 20. and ulually, wiledome and knowledge, whereunto it is here compared, Dant, 1, 14, And it is very useful and necessary for direction in our works and labours, Iohn 11, 9, 10. But darkness on the other side is very uncomfortable; it is used to express the most calamitous and disconsolate condition, lob 30. 26. Ecclef. 9.17. Ha. 8.22. Amos 5.18.20. Ha.50. 10. Eccl. 11.8. very unufeful, as putring a flop to all labour, Exod. 10.23. Josh. 4. 9, very dangerous, as causing a man to stumble at every sone, to fall Into every pit, to wander out of his way &c. 35. and folly and ignorance in the mind, is usually experiled by the name of darknesse, Eph. 4. 18. and 5. 8. Rom, 1. 21. In the creation, darknesse was the first evil which God removed, and light the first good creature that he made, Gen. 1.2,3. light excelleth darkness, as the beautifull and orderly frame of nature, doth the first confused chaos,

V. 14. The wife mens eyes are in bis head] The reason of the former comparison, a wise man is in the light, but a fool in darknefs. In his head, as in a watch-tower, from whence he feeth his way before him a far off, taketh notice of things to come, as well as things present, is circumspect and heedful, judicious and wary in his undertakings: Therefore they who are called wife men in one place, Deut, 16, 19, are called men that have their eyes open, in another place, Exod. 23.8 They do in the beginning of a business look forward to the end of it, they forecast events, foresee consequences; their eyes try their wayes. as Plalm 11. 4. fo looking firair forward, denoteth pondering and weighing a mans actions, Proverbs 4.25,26, hence it is that Mofes faid to his father in Law, who was a very wife man, Thou shalt be to us in steed of eyes, to guide and counfel us, Numb to.31, where the LXX, render it # 950 80-THE, thou shalt be an Elder, a Counsellour, a guide amongst us; fo Job faith of himfelf, that he was eyes to the blind, Job 29. 15. A Counfellour and guide unto them. Thus the excellency above any other man, to draw forth all the flower and quinteffence | of will lome is described by the eye, as being the principall part of the body, and most beneficial to the whole, 1 Cor. 12, 16, 17, 21.

Matth. 6, 22, and what the eye is to the body, that is, to the mind; Eph. 1.18.

But the fool walketh in darkneffe.] Hereby we understand what is meant by having the eyes in the head, namely, to have them usefull for guiding and ordering our waves, fo as that we may not erre, wander, flumble, fall, miftake, mifcarry in our affairs. antithefis should have run thus, but the fools eyes are in his heels, or he harh no eyes to fee; but the use of Scripture is to put in the place of the antithesis, that which shall in fense amount thereunto, as Prov. 15...17, the one part of the verfe is parabolical or provibilal, but the antitudis is a pilin and familiar; fo Prov. 15. 2 and 15.19. The fool is rath, heady, inconfiderate, kannot different events, not forced changers; kidwly fror which way to chafe, or tredule; his eyes are any where the state than his head, Prov. 17. 24, is earlied headleng in his bidnight, $410, thinked and taken Provibed, 16.19, $1 bett. 1.9 Match: 17. 17. 36. Thus far he hath shewed the excellency of wildom above folly; now he sheweth wherein, no withill anding, they do fo far agree, as now he shewcit wherein, nhwirittlanding, they do to 1st agree, as that variety belong time to them both.

And I percribed! The meaning is, piousichtlanding this excellenty of the one above the other; yet I percribed that one event highest to them all! They are equally tubiget to the Ame unlarge events that is cannot by this own counted exempt buildelf from the Iame conjumple calameters which other men fall into a sa two wayes which frem to part, the one turning to the right hand and the other to the left, and yet both at last bring to the fame

V. 15. Then faid I in mine heart 1 i.e. Therefore, or hercupon I faid in mine heart, if it happen to me, even to me, as to the fool, to what end have I taken fo much pains to be more wife and learned than he, being by all my, wildome not a whit prote-fied from those evils which he hath by his folly exposed himself

.That this alfo is vanifle] Some make this to be a judgement on that hafty and angry inference, mby was I then more wife? and fo the meaning to be; this was my infirmity and vanity, to undervalue wiscome, and measure it by the casuall events which befall it, as Pfalm 73. 13. ____ 15. and 77. 10. But the meaning is, that in this respect wiscome is no more able to make a man happy, or to bring perfect tranquility to the foul, than folly is ! albeit in other respects there be a singular excellency in it above the other.

Here then observe, 1. That the most excellent endowments of mind that are cannot perfectly satisfic the heart of man,

2 That yet there is a special beauty and goodness in such gifts, to draw the delight of the heart unto them, as being to the mind, as the eye to the head, the guide and the beauty of it; or as light to the eye, a most congenial and suitable good unto it,

3. That events and fuccesses depend not upon the counsels of men, nor upon the gifts of God beflowed on them, but his providence both the casting voice, and doth over-rule and order them all as pleaseth him, Eccles, 9, 11, Pfalm 127, 1, 2, many times those who have least wisedome or goodnesse, have greatest successe. 4. That notwithstanding the Providence and Counsel of God hath the preeminency in the events of things, yet that hindresh not the excellency of wisedome above folly, neither are we there-by at all incouraged to find fault with our selves for any labour in the use of means, onely we must so use them, as not to deifie them, nor to trust in them, but wholly to depend upon God for his bleffing on our Counfels, to fulmit to his wife and holy purposes, when they are disappointed, to admire his goodnesse when at any times he turneth our imprudence or improvidence unto good and maketh the event not answerable to our follies, but to his love.

5. That we cannot judge of the wildom or folly, the goodnels or badnels of men by outward events, because these happen alike to all, Chap. 8.14. & 9.11.

V. 16. There is no remembrance &c. | What he observed in the general before, he now maketh good in two particulars, viz oblivion and death, which are both alike common to wife men and to fools. Wife men may feem to fecure at least their names though they cannot their bodies from mortality; by such magnificent works as So-lomon here wrought, and by such noble contemplations as he was conversant in ; but he affures us here the contrary, and elsewhere; that Piety onely keepeth the name from rotting with the body, Prov. 10.7. Pfalm 112 6. Pfalm 49. 11, 12 ler, 17. 13. Time will eat out all the monuments of wildom, or though they continue, yet the renown of a wife man doth him no good at all, he is not after death sensible of it, or comforted with it, so hap, 1.11. new wife Chap.11.

men, that artic in after ages, will darken and eclipse the honour of ercifed in worldly things, according to the travel which God men, that artic in after ages, will darken and eclipse the honour of hath appointed for the sons of men, Ch. 1. 13. Ephel, 5.28.2 Thef. those that went before them : and so will it be done to them in the ages that follow. To be fure, no mere wife or great mans honour feparated from Piety, will hold pace with his being; at the last day there will so much shameful matter be discovered against the wifest of wicked men, as they shall then lose all their renown, and shall appear to be vessels of dishonour and shame for evermore, I Cor.4.5. 2 Tim. 2. 20.

And how dieth the wife man ? at the fool] The fecond fate common to both. This how, in a passionate interrogation, noting geief that it is fo; wonder that it is no otherwise; and indignation or that it is 10; wonder that it is in different in their worth, should distain, that things so exceeding different in their worth, should both of them perish alike. Thus there is a Quomedo dolentis, of grieving, Lam 1.1. Admirantis, of wondring, Acts, 2.7. 8. Indignantis, or objurgantis, of chiding and disdain, John 5. 44. Matth. 23 33. And because it may be objected that this Argument may as well disable Piety from inaking a man happy, as wisedom: Since the same question may be framed of them, as well as of these, how dieth the just man ? as the unjust: we must remember that piety follows the joil man I as the unjust: we must remember that a perty tollows a man, and 6 abides with hijmafert death, which no other acquired excellencies do either as ornaments or as comforts, Rev. La, 13. Death desh indicar of their blightful life scanning with Christ which was that which made them happy there. V Vicked men are dead, being alive, 1 Tim 5, 6 and good men live in indeath, John 11, 25, 66. Matchia, 3, therefore the lewis called their burying places do the control of the con mus viventium, the houses of the living. Therefore there is no du-table life or honour, but in the fear of the Lord.

V. 17. Therefore I hated life, &c.) This is the effect which this great vanity of the most excellent humane endowment wrought in the heart of Solomon, made him weary of living to so little purpose, as to dye at last like the basest of men, He saw no lovelynesse or quieting labour, all which at last runneth down like the waters of of lordan, into the same lake of death, with the other refuse of men. Many mens poverty, pains, sicknesse, worldly troubles, have caused them to complain of their life; but here is one who had health, peace, honour, abundance of all the contents which the world could afford, not murmuringly, but as it were judiciously and critically making the same complaints. The greatnesse of his wifdom being, fuch, as that all the comforts of life were too narrow to fatisfie the inquiries of it, he faw little valuable or defirable in it.

Here observe: 1. That life it self is too mean a thing to bring full content to the foul of man. It must be something better than life which must do it, Pfal. 63.3.

2. That in the greatest confluence of worldly things, the life of a man may be full of grievous labour, and he weary of it, not onely out of anguish of spirit, but of natural wisedome observing the vanity thereof.

3. That the wildom of man, without making use of the grace of God, is very apr to undervalue the greatest outward blessing which humane nature is capable of; as Solomon here doth life. There is naturally fo much diftemper in the heart of man, that except all things answer his own defires and expectations, he will fall out with his very life, and pick quarrels with the choysest blessings that God here affords him. As a little cloud hides the light of the whole Sun from the eye, so amidst a multitude of en joyments, a little labour or trouble which comes along with them, doth darken the beauty, and remove the content of them all, Gen. 30 1. Pfal. 59.15.

4. Concerning this point, of being weary of life or hating it as an unlovely and undefireable thing, me may note, 1. That life is the choicest and principal outward blessing which God here affords us, and that unto the comfort and prefervation whereof all other outward bleflings are directed, Matth. 6.25. 2. That though in a way of obedience we are to undervalue it at the command of God when he calls on us to lay it down Luke 14, 26. Act. 20, 24. 1 John 3.16. John 12.25, and in comparison of a better life, we may groan for a deliverance from it, and to be with Christ, Phil, 1,23. yet it is a great fault out of passion, murmuring, outward troubles, nay, out of largeness of heart, as here Solomon doth, to disesteem and wax weary of fo great a blessing, Gen 27.46. Numb. 14.2. Job 10.1. and 36.20. Jon.4.3, 8.

V. 18. Tea. I hated all my labour, &c.] All those magnificent and excellent works, which with so much labour I had wrought. They were all fo far from ministring unto my heart any folid con-tentment, that I grew wholy out of love with them, had no regard nor respect at all unto them. If by hatred here, and in the sormer verse, be meant onely an abatement of that love and delight which his heart might over-sensually take in them, then this was a very ns near might over-i-charary take in olden, then it was a very commendable first of the variety which he discovered in them a co-ciding to the counfel of the Apollic pipe in the fame ground; 1 Co., 7.3,30,31,10 haz. 1, Loren in the wind, that feems to be a worldly and fecular life, or Temporal phing, nor the bings of the world, that is, the provisions and materials which are the fewel of luft in the world : and fo hatred fometimes fignifies an abarement and moderation of love, Matth. 10.37. compared with Luke 14 26. John 12.15.Gen.29 30,31. Bet if by hatred is meant a deteftation and abhordency of them, fo as to leave of all care of duty to be ex-

- 13. and this to do, because we find not that plenary fearstaction from them, which they were never ordained to adminia fter then this was an inordinate hatred which did not belong unto the works themselves, (being in themselves good) but unto the sinful distemper of the heart from whence it proceeded. Such was the fullen diftemper of Ifrael in the wildernels, Numb. 11.6 &

Because I should leave it unto, &c.] Here the wise man doth sub-ovn reasons of this his weariness and dislike of all his past labours: 1. Because he was to leave them; there was a ne effity of parting with them at the laft. As the heart of man in this flate of corrup tion is naturally aprito cleave to the world and worldly things, fo there is a peculiar delight in those works which are the fruit of his own wisedome and labour: and he finds it more hard to wean and take off his affections from them, than from any other. As the Apostle faith of a mans own proper lust, so we may of his own labour and work, that it doth more easily draw away the beart, lam. 1.14. therefore when God punisheth such men, he usually doth it in the works of their own hands, in their principal and peculiar imployments; as Tyrus in her merchandize, Ezek. 27. 27. Pharaoh in his river, Erck 29.3. 4. The wife man is apr. to glo y in his wifedome, and the frong man in his firength, &c. let 9.23. Dan. 4.30, 31. This is the first ground of vexation, They must leave their wealth to others, Pfal.49.10, 12. V. 19. And who knoweth whether he shall be a wife manor a fonly?

2. The reason of his forementioned dislike of all his labour; because he must leave them to the man that comes next after him, who haply may be very unfit to succeed him in so wife and great works. It is not in mans power to leave the works of his hands, when he must himself no longer enjoy them, unto such as are most likely to improve or preferve them : but be he what he will, wife or foolish he must have not onely the truition of my labours; but the dominion over them, Pfal. 39.6. And this is a great vanity, to know a mans felf how to get great things, and to know how to preferve. and to enjoy them; but not to know what will become of them at the last : A wife man it may be will alter all ; a fool will scatter and diffipate all, and fo all the fathers wildom may quickly come to nought by the fons folly, wherein I have laboured and wherein I have fhewed my felfe wife Which by my labor and my wildom I have gotten, He understandth humane wildom in managing worldly affairs to the best im-provement, sia. to 13. Ezek 38.45.5. These are the two great princi-ples of humane actions, Wildom to direct; Labour to execute: Wifdom by countel guideth labour; and Labour through experience encreaseth wisdom. That wisdom is fruitless, which doth not produce labour; and that labour is useles, which is not managed by wisdom. Some conceive that Solomon here did foresee, or at least fear that Rehoboam by his folly might featter many of tho'e great works and lofe much of that ample power and wealth which his father by his wisdom had gotten, 1 Reg. 12.13,15.

V. 20. Therefore I went about to cause my heart to despair of all the labour, &c I went about, or, I circled. The meaning is, Having turned hither and thither to take a view of all humane actions, and every where discovering notable vanity in them all, I found my felf, after I was wearied in this round, brought at last to utter despair and tespondency of spirit; being without hope of ever finding out that in any of my labours for which I had undertaken them When I found after all my labour, this fad uncertainty attending on them, that it was out of my power to dispose them for the future so, but that they might fall into the hands of a sool that would demolish and diffipate them all ; who by his folly would extinguish the monuments of my wildom; and by his luxury the truits of my labour : Then I bestirred my felf to make my heart despair, to call it wholy of from all my labours. The word importeth a delifting from a pur pole or work undertaken, a changing of a mans counsel, finding the attempt to be fruitless or unleasable, Isa. 57.10.Ler.2.25.& 18.12. There is a Rational despair, when a man having erroneously sought for some good from that which is wholly unable to afford it, doth thereupon give over fo fruitles an inquiry, and betake himself to thit which is more effectual, 18.15, 2. and there is a passionate de-spair proceeding from that frowardness of heart which such a difappointment is apt to produce in carnal minds, when, because a man cannot enjoy that good from a thing which he expected, he will therefore wholy fall out with it, though it he otherwise good in its degree, and doth bring such comfortable fruit as God appointed it for. This is a finful despair : For the Lord hath made many promises unto the labour which we take about outward things, Prov. 12. 24. and 13.11, & 31.31 Pfal 128 1,2. And hath a word of b'essing ever p-oportionable to those ends and uses for which he hath appointed them, Deut 28 2-- 8. Mat. 4. 4. If Solomon mean here the former despair then it was an effect of his wildom, dictating unto him not to place his hopes upon vain things which would delude and abuse him, but to take off his heart from the irordinate love of empty things. If the later, then it was a corrupt and froward aversion from from things good in their degree, because the providence of God might haply dispose otherwise of them than he desired Duty & labor about outward things belongs unto us, but the diff ofition of them

Chap.ii. into what hands he pleafith, belongeth unto God. In the mean time, it is a good argument to draw off the heart from anxious and inordinate toyl about worldly things : and rather to imploy our though s about the education of our children, left much wealth in the hands of a foolish fon prove an argument of our fol-Ny, whereas a little estate with principles of wisdom and piety in-filled into him that must enjoy it, will be a greater blessing unto him, and an evidence of more wisdom in our selves.

V. 21. For there is a man whose labour is in wisdom, &c.] i. e. who, I, by his habitual skill and faculty of contrivance. 2, by his experimental and improved knowledge; and 3. by his just, honest experimental and improved action wheels and 3.59 his 3.54, foreta; and righteous dealing; concurring all,4 with diligent labour; (unto which kind of principles fo attempered, the blesing of God is ufually annexed,) doth get a fair and full eftate: and when he hath all done, must leave it to another who never took thought about it nor stirred hand or foot towards the gathering of it. This is a third reason of the wife mans wearinesse of his life and labours namely, that he should be a very drudge for another man, and should use all his skill and pains, and suffer so much anxiety and disquiet onely to purchase rest and illenesse for his successour. And this is a great & fore evill that the labour should be one mans, and the fruit thereof anothers, and is often threatned as a punishment, Job 5.5. Hol.7. 9.& 8.7. Deut. 28. 30,31,32,33. Pl.39. 6. Pro.

vexation of his heart] Hereby are noted those discruciating, disquiering, careful thoughts, whereby he doth project and contrive within himself all wayes of gain, and how to increase and preserve a great estate, Psal. 49. 11. Hab. 2.5,6. 1 Tim. 6.9,10. This may refer to all the three Reasons before given; 1. What hath man left to himself of all his labour and vexation when he is dead and gone, all the world is then gone to him, Job 1.21. 1 Tim. 6.7. Pfal,49 17. 2 What good hath he by all that pains which was taken for another man, who if he were wife, would be able to take the paines for himfelf, and if foolins, will be likely to make all another many pains fruit-fler, which he took to provide for him, Job 27, 16,17, 3. What hath he of all his Labour more than the other man who face full; and lived quietly, and faw him toyl and drudge to get him an estate who laboured not for it? nothing at all more as to concernment and fruition, much more as to wearineffe and vexation.

V. 23. For all his dayes are forrowes, and his travell grief] &c.] These words are very emphatical, to set forth the pain and trouble of such a man who toyls for others: and the wife man closeth this disquisition as he did the first, Chap. 1. 18. only this is expressed with greater emphasis, as being the greater evill of the two; as ver. with greater emphasisationing the greater critical for the trouble 2.1. 1. The word are many, to fine the greatness of the trouble 2. The word translated forozz, signifieth a very painful and cruciating grief, the grief of some fore wound, Gen. 34.15. Jer., 51.8. and uted in the case of Israels forrow in their bondage in Figypt, Exod.3.7, and in Babylon, Lam 1.12. and to expresse the forrow Exod, 3.7, and in Daoyton, Lam 1.12. and to express the forcows of Christ, 1fa.53.34. See Job 33.19. Prov. 14. 13. 3. The Abstract is used for the Concrete, it is not faid, All his days are forrowfull, but very forrow it self, which addeth much force to the sense, as Gen. 3.6. Plal. 5.9. & 39 5. Hag. 2. 8. Gen 12. 2. Cant. 5. 16. 4. The word is in the plural number, all his days are forrows, (i.e.) full of forrows great forrow, and variety of forrow; as Isa, 63. 6 2 Pet. 3. 11. So it is faid, that the Sodomites were Imitten with blindnesses, Gen. 19.11. 2 Cor. 1.3. Eccl 5.6.

and his travel [or anxious and careful labour] grief, Or, indig nation, his wearifom imployments, full of disquiernesse, and of continual follicitude, meeting, withall, with many miscarriages and disappointments, do stir up much grief and displeasure of heart. Hereby is noted the exceeding great trouble of heart, which arifeth out of an inordinate converting about worldly things, and apprehension of parting with them. For the lesse measure there is in the labour of getting them, the more trouble there is in the thoughts of parting with them. If the life of the best men be full of evil and labour, Gen, 47, 9, Pfal, 90, 10, Job 14.1. & 5.7. (Our mother brings us forth in forrow and unto forrow) much more unquiet must be the life of those who labour in the fire, and for very

V. 24. There is nothing better for a man, than to eat, &c.] In this verse, and so to the end of the Chapter is contained, that which is the whole fum and subject of this book, which is to thew, wherein the only good which a man can attain unto in his labour about worldly things, doth confift, and the happinesse of this present wortaly things, auth conflit, and the happinene of this prefer life which is to get the heart feafoned with the fear of God, and to be good in his fight, or approved of him; and then, in the affu-rance and joy of his favour, to make use of all outward good things with quiet contentment, with freedom, cheerfulnefle and delight, which is a special blessing which the Lord gives unto his own servants. The Apostle puts all this into two words, Godliness and Contentment, 1 Tim.6.6.

The words admit of a feveral reading, though all run to the fame islue, There is nothing better for a man than---- fo our version. The word [than] according to the reading is to be supplyed, it not being in the Original. And so Interpreters agree, that such a word as nissor tanum may be understood, as it is necessary to be supplyed elsewhere; as 11a.1.6. where, in the Original, the words run in this manner, There is no foundneffe in it, wounds and bruifes,&c. where the vvord but, or only is necessarily to be supplyed; no foundnelle, [but] wounds or bruiles : So here, There is not good for a man that he eat; the word but is to be supplyed, There is not, or it is not good for a man but that he eat : It is expressed, Chap. 3.12. Others read the words with an interrogation, Is it not good for a man that he eat, &c? (i. e.) It is good Other's read thus, This good is not in a mean, (i.e.) in the power of man, that he eat and drink, &c. As he cannot help it, but he must in time leave his outward things, which with fo much labour he hath gotten, and that to such as which with 10 much labout in nath gotten, and that to luch as it may be, will not diffole of them to his defire; fo even while he doth actually potesfs them himfelf, it is not in his power to use them, much lefs to enjoy them with delight and pleasure, without the speciall gift of God. All amounts to the same illue; which is this: Since there is in all the studies, labours, affairs of men so much vanity and vexation, as hath been here discovered, by the ableft and wifest inquirer into the creature; it remains, if we would effectually free our felves from this vanity and vexation, that giving over those anxious and disquieting labours, we betake our selves to a free, cheerful, and comfortable use of those good things which God hath blessed us withal; and that so we may do, to commend our felves by fincerity of heart unto God, from whose hand and gift alone this mercy proceedeth, and not from the power or will of man.

This also is vanity out, for a wirked man to labour for others whom he loves not, not ever intended his labour for. Here we fee, 1. Goodnelle conflits in approving a mans self to God. 2. That sweet and perfect contentment is peculiar unto good men. 3. That wisdom or skill to get riches is the gift of good men. 3. Inax wincom or sun to get recest is the gift of God, Deut. 8.18. 4. That knowledge to the them being gotten is likewife Gods gift, as verfe 24. 5. That good men onely are the wroper fubiek? of true joy, God. 5, 22. 6. That amongft other curfes God doth many times punish viviked men with giving them up to the infaitable defires of their coverous hearts, to weather of the god of the coverous hearts, to weather of the god of the coverous hearts, to weather of the god of the god of the coverous hearts, to weather of the god ry themselves in gathering wealth to no purpose of their own, of Eccles, 4. 8. 7. Gods providences many times disposeth the la-labours of wicked men for the use and good of the godly.

CHAP, III.

N this Chapter the wife man proceedeth, in discovering the about them, in regard of the total uncertainty of future events, as having their whole dependance on the predeterminate purpole of God, and not at all on the anxious care and thoughts of man, And that therefore fince man is not able to alter the feries and contexture of events, fore-ordained by God, he ought with contentmenof heart to enjoy his condition, and to fear the Lord, and depend on his providence, which is not possible for him by all his own folon his providence, which is not pointed for this my at his own tol-licitude to prevent; or clearly. And therefore though he may cheerfully enjoy prefem bleffings, yet he must not have his heart glued to them, not build his chieft hope on them, in regard they are fovariable and subject to unavoydable changes and uncer-tainties. So that the doctrine of the ten first vertes of this Chapter feemeth to be; 1, An argument enforcing the former counsel of the wife man, Chap. 2, 24. That fince there is a fet and prefixed season for all even the most contingent events, and that it is out of the power of man by all his thoughts, counsels and cares, to break through the limits of Gods providence in the guidance of them; therefore our wisest way is to yield our selves unto God, to depend on his counsel and provision, to rest contented in that which he gives, and not to disquiet our selves with the cares, scars, hopes of fuch things , as are wholly without the order of our wildom or power, 2. A caveat in the use of outward comforts, still to remember that they are changeable, subject to time and providence to wear them out, and deprive us of them: and therefore not to be offended, if we have not alwayes our defires, nor enjoy them to long, and in to constant a tenout of success, as we could wish our felves, 3. A further observation of vanity in outward things, in the various actions of other men, as he had before discovered in in his own labours, in his own labours. V. 2. The Wife man subjoymeth an Induction of Several parti-

ulars, obvious to every mans experience, whereby he demonstrateth the truth of this general Proposition. Some of these particulars are things natural, and wholly our of the power of man: others humane and voluntary, such as are done and directed by the skill of man. To teach us, that all the most free and contingent actions are under the Law of Gods providence, directed and limited thereby, as well as those which are most natural and ne-

Another thing to be remembred here, is; That the Lord doth not by every one of these particulars signific what is good or lawfull to be done, but only teach us that not onely the good actions of men, but their fins, non only their ferious actions, but those which are most Ludierous and vain, are all of them under the decrees and over-ruling counfels of God, diresting of them and their feafons as it pleafeth him, Matth. 10 29,30. This Solomon by an Induction of divers particulars, and those very various, and each by way of antithess with his contrary joyned to him, some natural actions, some civil, some domeltical, some virious, some vertuous, some ferious and solemn, others light and ludicrous, some wise, some passionate; by all these he assured us, that there is a holy and wise work of God in predefining, ordering, limiting, tompering, disposing of all these and the like affaires of men, and so qualifying in the life of a man one contrary with another, and ballancing prosperity and adversity by each other, that in every condition a good man may find cause of prai fing God, and of trufting in him, and of exercifing this tranqui-lity and contentment of mind, even in contrary conditions be-cause the holy hand of God is in the one, as well as in the other

The ten roly man cook as in the constant of the cook o When he builds, God may pull down, or put in fome accident and cafual event which shall divert, or undo all: Yet he doth not intend to restrain men from needfull Labour in their callings; not intend to rettrain men from needfull Labour in their callings; but from trailing in or building on their Labours, and firetring if fuch fruits follow not thereupon as they intended and expedibut patiently to fubmit to the holy Will of God, unto whom it belongesh to dispose of our perfons, of our liberties as it pleafeth him. Whence observe, That carking and caring is indeed a firring with the irreflitble providence of God, which no labour of ours can alter, or bend to our wils, If. 4, 1, 5, 9, Jon 4 8, 9, as on the other fide, glorying of out own ftrength or wildom, is a robbing him of his honour, Deur, 8, 17, 18. Habbac, 1, 16. Labour is subordinate unto providence, but must never strive with it. There is no profit to any man in his Labour, without Gods bleifing, which therefore he must pray for, & rejoyce in without fruitless anxiety for the future, V. 10, I have feen the travell Chap. 1.13, men might be app to think when they fee so many turns and changes in the world, that all things are carried by a blind and rash disorder, casually and uncertainly, as it falls out, without any beauty or order in them. To this he answers, That it is God who hath given unto men this travel to exercise themselves in various and contrary employments, passions, events, and that he doth, though we do not fuddenly observe it, direct them all unto a beautiful iffue : all these contraries work together, for good, Rom 8, 28, Again, men might think on the other hand, If man have indeed no profit of all mignt time on the other many a man have maded no profit of all his labour, but when all is done, God alone orders the Event, then to what End should be weary himself in so fruitleste an employment? To this also there is an answer in these words; God hath given to man his work, which he is to undertake in obedience to Gods command : and God doth usually dispense his mercies unto us in the use of means, and by a bleffing on our labours, Prov. 10. 4,22. Joh. 21. 3,6. Acts 27.22,31. And though Labour do not effect what we expected from it, but Gods providence ao not enter wine we expected noth 1, but of 2008 provinced frould (as fometimes it doth) act contrary to, or diverfly from our endeavours, yet this good there is in honeft Labour alone, and this End God hath in requiring it of us, we are Exercised therein, and so kept from idlenesse, and the evill effects which would fol-

and lo kept from istenene, and the evil effects which would tol-low thereupon. Labour is not only a duty, but in this respect be-neficial, (even when it misserrieth as to the principal end aymed at in it) that the heart isthereby kept in that station and order wherein Gad did originally set it, Gen.3. 17,18,19. "V. 11. He bath made every ship beautiful in his time so in the time and proper staff in thereof.] This is a, further commendation of the wise providence of God in the government of the world, and all the events which happen in it, to the end that men may with these missers of the did not provide the set. more quiernelle and contentment acquielce therein. We might be apt to stumble and be offended at the seeming consusions which are in the world, and the great uncertainty of affaires therein But however it feem to unto us, who are not able to put together all the pieces of Gods providence, nor to foresee that frame and feature which he will form them unto arthe last, yet this is certain, that as in the work of Creation all things were very good, Gen. 1, 31. So in the work of Gubernation and providence, All things will at last appear to be very beautiful, and those things which seemed but as consused heaps when they lay asunder, will, when Gods whole work is done, (Ia. 10. 12.) and they are all put together, appear to have been full of order, and decorum: as beau-ty in the body arileth out of an equall temperament of contraries ogether, and fo in a curious piece of hanging various colours wifely mixed make an elegant piece; and letters which in the Prin-ters boxes feem all confused, and figuific nothing; yet being set together by an exquifite Copy, they afford us a learned and ela-borate work t as we fee in the History of Joseph and his brethen, of Davids troubles and Kingdom: Mordecai, Esther, and Haman, the scason for them, as fruits, and flowers, and other delights as in the summer, Sorrow and Affliction is in the season of it as useful and needful for men and in its kind as beautiful, as mirch and joye in another feafon, 1 Per. 1.6,7. Jam. 1, 2,3. & 5.7,11. Ecclef 7,13,

also he hath fet the world in their heart, &c.] These words are in this place very difficult, and variously both rendred, and understood. Some read them thus, Quamdiu jeculum eft, as long as the world, or worldly things continue, the Lord doth put into the mind of man the work which God doth from the beginning to the end, excepting onely that which man cannot find out, or attain unto: and fo the fense to be, That God hath in the book of the world, and of his providence in the Government of all things world, and of his provinence in the Government of all things therein, fo legibly repreferred to the mind of man his righteous and beautiful ordering of them all, that man may if he fer him-felf about it, easily discover Gods wonderful wildom therein; as Acts 14.17. Rom 1.19,20, only indeed fome things are unfear-cheable to human reason, which he is to admire and adore, wairing till the time of the revelation of Gods righteous Judgements for the full and diffinet understanding of them , Rom. 11. 33 34. Job 9. 10. & 11.7,8,9. Others, by putting the world in mens hearts, understand, according to one of the usual acceptions of the word, 1710, a defire implanted in man of eternity and perpetuiry, and fo the fense to be, That albeit God doth make every thing good and beautiful, yet the heart of man is fo fer upon immortality, that he cannot find out amongst any of Gods works here which have a beginning and an end, or are measured by time, any thing wherein his heart may fully and finally reft.

thing wherein his neart may turly and minary tert.

But that which feems most agreeable to the scope of the place, and grammer of the words, is this; God hath indeed made every thing beautifull in his time, and thereupon men ought with quiet thing beautiful in his time, and thereupon men ought with quier and cheefful hearts to observe Gods providence in all things, and therein to rest, without anxiety or discruciating care: but man cannot find out the work of God, nor observe the beauty thereof fo exactly as he should, which is the reason that he doth not so patiently acquiesce therein. Of this defect he giveth two reathes.

1. That they have the world in their hearts, they are to taken up with the thoughts, and cares of worldly things, and are fo exer-cised in the fore travel belonging unto them; that they do not na-turally look up to the wife and holy disposition of God, so as to rest therein. This duty is the remedy of such cares, Matth. 6. 26. 30.32. and such cares are the hinderance of this duty.

30.32. and luch cares are the minderance of this unity.
2. They cannot find out the work which God doth from the begin-ning to the end] Man being of thort continuance, doth nor many times live to observe a full point in the works of God. Their beginning may be in one age and their end in another. That part which lee in my days,may appear to me full of diforder and confusion, as heaps of stone and lime, and other provisions towards a goodly building; whereas if I did live to fee the end of God in fuch works, it would appear, that in their time, or maturity they would be full of beauty: that fruit which is most tweet and delicate in its scason, is fowre and unpleasant while it is yet green. It is the End of Gods work which fets forth its beauty. Works of providence, as works of Creation, may begin in a Chaos, and feem without form and void, Gen. 1, 2, but they end in admirable order and beauty, Chap. 8.17. Pfal. 37, 38, Jam., 11, Hab. 2.3. So here is the doctrine of the excellent beauty which is in Gods providences. The reason why man is not thereby perswaded unto contentment and patience in all estates, namely, his natural impotency to observe the same. The grounds of that impotency, 1. His worldly-mindednesse. 2, His fhore continuance: yet he ought by faith, and by the evidence of Gods dealings in other ages, to rectific this defect, and upon that ground to build his cheerfur enjoyment of bleffings while God beowes them upon him. So it follows, Rowes them upon him. So it tollows, V. 12. I know that there is no god in them: but for, &c.] I know by my uryal and experience, that there is no good in or for them, i, e, for men; but valley with concentante to heart to rejeve in Gods bleffings, and to do good in his life, i, e, to live in the fear of God; as Chap. 2.4, e.5, or to do good unon themselved in a liberal enjoyment of their life and labour; as Pfal. 49, 18, or to do good to others in the time of their joy, as Neh. 8. 10, 12.

V. 13. And also that every man should eat, &c.] Here are the parts of this contentment, to eat chink, en joy our labours; and to rejoyce in them- Whereby is meant not a gluttonous, luxurious, and intemperate use of these things, as they, I Cor. 15, 32; Matth. 44. the future, moderated by the fear of God, as before, Chap, 2, 24.

V. 14. I know that what fever God doth it shall be for ever, &c.]
Here from the unchangeablnesse of Gods providence, the permanent and irrecovable course of his counsels, the Absolute persedion of his works, wherein there is nothing defective, which requires addition, nothing superfluous, or to be taken from them; he doth further teach us with willingnesse and contentment to submit to God, whose Counsels we are not able by all our eares to alter or (hall be for ever] The works themselves may alter and vanidaof Davids troubles and a ringion: now of the fewer surgifying of Chiff, &c.

Again God hath made every thing beautifult in its time] As cold in a flable and fixed way dispose of all things to holy ends, beyond and frost, are as orderly, as needlary, as ulefull in the winter, the His decrees are like charlors proceeding out of mountains of brafs to note their firmitude and immutability , Zach. 6. 1, 2, which no power can thake or remove, Ifa. 38, to. Job 38.31 .--- 35, and 48.8. & 42. 1 Job 9 12, 1/2, 14.27. & 46.10.

and Ged doth it, that men should fear before him] Gods decrees and immurable providence should not drive us eit er into defoair and a wilful neglect of all means, in the use whereof God expedicth that we thould wait upon him , and in which as in the way of his providence, he useth to work good for his people : nor do they allow us to lean on our own wildom, and to deifie our own counfels, or burn incense to our own nets; but by them we are taught, in confideration of Soveraignty, power, and wildom of God in all things, to fland in awe of him, to fubmit unto him, in bleflings to be thanfull, in sufferings to be patient, because ftil it is the Lord that decrees, orders, disposeth and over-ruleth all Job 1,21, 1 Sam. 3, 18, 2 Sam. 15, 25, 26, Pfal. 37. 5, 7.

V. 15. That which bath been, is now, and that which is to be, &cc.] Chap. t.g. This is an explication of what was laft faid , verse 14. to flew how what God doth is for ever: The things themselves passe, and others succeed in their places, but this series of things is carried on regularly and uniformly by a flanding Law, and fixed decree, appointing a perpetual and proportionable Succession of things one after another, as hath been from the beginning, Gen, and God requireth that which is past. That which time thrusteth forward, and so maketh to be past, God restores and brings it back again. And this is also an excellent argument of contentment in our estate, be it what it will : 1. Because God dealeth not in a ftrange and unufual manner with us, otherwife than with others before us; that which now is our Cafe, hath been the cafe of other good men, and will be the case of others when we are gone, Cor. 10.13. A humane Temptation there, is that which God doth ufually exercise men withall, as elsewhere the rod of a man, a Sam. 7. 14, 2. Because God tempereth our lives, and doth not keep us alwayes in one and the same estate. In trouble he bringeth back and referreth comfort to those that wait on him, Pfal, 126, 1. 4, as to Joy Chap. 42, 12, In abundance, he can shake our mountain which we thought unmoveable, and bring back our forrous again, Pfal. 30. 6,7. fo that in both respects we ought to carry an awfull, reverend, and humble heart towards God in all conditions; quietly referring our selves in every estate unto his Patherly disposal, who best knoweth what is good for us.

V. x6. And moreover I fam ander the Sun the place of Judgement.

&c.] I faw another Vanity under the Sun, Having formerly shewed the vanity of knowledge, and of pleasures, and of humans Labours, in regard of the internal anxiety and travel of mind that doth accompany them, and of the external changes they are sub-ied unto, and manifold miscarriages and disappointments which are incident unto them, together with the remedy hereof, a free and cheerful enjoyment of Gods bleffings with piety towards him for the prefent; and a comfortable dependance on his holy providence, with godly fear for the future : upon a vifible ob jection which might be made against the providence of God, (which he had so much commended) with which Tempration many good men have been shaken, to wir, the prosperous impley and oppressions of wicked men, and the sad condition of the Innocent and opprefied, Job 21.3.—13. Pfal. 7, 2.—5. Jer. 12. 1. Habae, 3. 14. he proceedeth to vindicate the doctrine of providence, and to flow the vanity of men in honour and great place without the fear of God : (for all the vanities in this book are still to be understood which maketh all other outward good things sweet and comfortable to us.) The greatest honour without a holy use of it, is fo far from making a man happy, that it is an occasion of much wickedneffe amongh men, one man proving a devill and woolf unto another, and making no other ule of power, than lyons or bears do, to michief others by. This wickednesse is aggravated, in that it was committed under the pretence of Gods ordinance, Magistracy and Courts of Tuffice were crefted by Gods appointment to be Sanctuaries and places of refuge for vyronged innocency to rapair unto for fuccour and relief : now then, for those who were ordatand to consfort and help goor and oppressed persons, to be them-felves through bribery, partiality, and injustice, the greatest op-pressours, and that with so high a hand, as to make the very tribunals of judgement, to be flaughter-houfes, and hops of cruelty, This was a great vanity among them, and a great Tempration. whereby a poor mans comfortable waiting on the providence of God is in danger to be shaken,

We here note, 1. That Power without Piety, is very apt to degenerate into cruelty and oppression. V. 8. If the fe ft the oppression of the poor and violent, &c.] The connexion of these word, with the former, stands thus: The sear of God doth many times expose men unto injury land violence, and that every where, all a Province and Countrey over, and that not onely from ordinary persons but from great men, and that without onesy to mountary persons but from great many and without remedy; because it haply they have recourse unto judgement and justice for ease, even they find wresting, perverting, distorting of justice: So that a mans tranquility in this life, may seem to be but little mended by piety and tear of God, whereby he is in dan-ger of being reduced to poverty and diffrefs. This is a flumbling-block, which may caufe men to be oftended at the wayes of God, Matth. 17.5,6.& 13.21. Gal. 5. 11. and good men have fumbled at it, Pfal 73.12,13. Against this temptation, he here subjoyns a feafonable antidote; they should not be much amazed at it, but rather comfort themselves, that there lieth an appeal to an higher Court, where they shall certainly be righted, and their innocency vindi cated. The latter clause somethus render, He that loveth it, shall not have any increase by, or in the abundance thereof Increase here, is a word which fignifieth the increase of the earth, such truits as may word which figurated the increase of the catt, the becaten; and money is not fullus edulis, though it come out of the earth. But the prefix is to before the word Abundance, being fometimes a note of the Accusative case, and expressing the object of an action, we may well render it as it is in our version; He that loveth abundance; as Gen. 34. 1, & 37. 2. and hath much forrow O., indignation. The word in fome copies (as the learned observe) is read with the points of a noun; in others, of a verb; and so they render it, multium irascitur, or indignatur, he is very angry, or he forroweth much, and hath fickness, and wrath. The meaning (as I conceive) is he eateth in darkeness, bale-ly, and wretchedly, as a flave to his riches, he storms, grieves, frets, is even fick with anger and vexation, at the expenses he is put unto in keeping but a mean and a fordid table. The Greek by a very easie mistake in the letters which are much alike, read it thus, All is dayes he is in darkenesse, x by x x x y hus, and in mourning and in for-row and in sicknesse and in wrath. His sickness for he hath sickness. The Affix is used for the separate and absolute pronoun; as Psaint 115.7 Ezck 29.3. Our reading, He hath forrow and wrath with his fichneffe, (where the conjunction copulative is rendred by the prepolition, [with] as fometimes elsewhere, 1 Sam. 14. 18.) feemeth to intimate fuch a fense as this, All his dayes, or while he lives he eats in forrow, and when he falls fick, and is in danger of death, he hath much wrath and indignation in his fickness for fear of parting from his wealth, which he to dearly loveth, and hath to hardly la-

Internal excellency there is in wisdom above folly, Chap 2, 11. But here he speaketh with relation to wealth, and the outward events of things, in which regard the wife man hath no peculiar prerogative above the fool. The one fares as deliciously s cloathed as riellly, hath lands and revenues left him by his an ceftors, as well as the ther. The wifest man can but provide for back and belly, and such other conveniencies, as outward thing are proper to supply, and so much may he do, who hath wealth without wit. V. 9. Better is the fight of the eyes, than the wandring of the defire By the fight of the eyes, he meaneth things prefent, and it pollellion, which we have before us, in our eye, and in hand thy the ponerion, which we have before this our eye, and in hand; by the wandring or walking of the foul, he meaneth an infairable that endless perfuit of the heart after things which we have not, and cannot castly overtake. So fight is opposed by the Apostle to faith, Because fight looketh on things in possessing Faith, on thing, in expectation, 2 Cor. 5, 7, and so property or possession is before called the seeing of things with the eye, Eccles 5, 11 and on the other side, unlist tissed defires are expressed bywandering of the heart up and down, Isiah 57, 10, Jer. 2, 27, & 14, 10, when the mind is not flayed and fixed with contentment in its present condition, but like a Bee flying from flower to flower, from creature to creature, to gather more. This then is the plain meaning of these words, it it better for a man quietly and contentedly to enjoy the chings which he hath in prefent possession, than to rove up and down, and weary himself with anxious ond unsatisfied desires after things which he hath not; since the poor man hath as much the substantial and principal benefit of outward things, as the rich, namely life and health, and food convenient i fince the wifest man that is, can fetch no more real good out of wealth, than remedy against coverous defires; there, by the fluggard, as an apology for his laziness. Though some would have it here understood in the person of a coverous rich man. As if he would answer Solomons question; what good hath one more than shother, the wife than the fools, the rich than the poor? yes faith the covetous rich man, he hath an estate to looke on, the other is continually vexed with want and defires, and it is much better to be in poffession of a good efface, than to languish under poverty; and be ever in a craving condition. Due this former terms in once genuine.

This allo is vanity and vexation of spirit] That is, in the latter sense

It is a vaine and troublesome thing to possels good things onely to looke on them, and not to vie them. Or rather in the former sense The wandring of the foole up and down after new gaine, and denying it felfe the comfortable fruition of prefent contentments, is vaang a terre the comportable trutton or pretent concernments, is va-nity, because much can do a man no more reall good, than a little cheerfully used: and vexation of print because infatiable defires do bring perpetual disquiet upon the heart of a man.

Especially fince no things acquirable by humane industry can exempt or protect a man from the evils, or common miferies, which mankind s exposed unto. Let one grow as rich, as potent, as honourable as she world can make him, A nitan he was before, and ha will be bur a man fill, from earth he came, and to earth lie will go, he lyes under a degree of mortality and infirmity, which by the help of no worldly wealth or greatnesse, he is able to break

CHAP. VI.I.

The Wife man having fet forth many vanities of this life, and the great disappointment which men meet with, who seek for happinelle and saissadion from them, and thereupon the vexation which naturally arifeth from fuch a disappointment : and having interwoven some general remedies against these vanities, namely, the fear and worship of God, and the cheerful enjoyment of outward bleffings: He here proceedeth to many other particular means of healing the vanities of this life, and procuring tranquility and peace to the mind of man in the midft of them. Such are, 1. A good name, verse 1. 2. A composed preparednesse of mind to entertain death, the chiefest outward evil, and consequently to bear any other forrow, verse 2, 3, 6. 3. Moderation and patience of spirit to bear with present evils, and to digest in juries, expecting the end and issue which God will give, verse 7. - 10, 4. and the day of death, than the day of ones birth | Somo understand here a note of similitude to joyne the two clauses together, As a good name is better than sweet syntment, so is the day of death than the day of birth. Others repeat the former clause in the latter unto such a man who hath a good name, better is, the day of death, than of birth. And the clauses seem to have Cognation with one another : for the day of Birth is a time of fellivity and with one another? For the ady of which is a time to the clearly and rejoycing, and accordingly uffed to be celebrated, Gened, 40, 23, Mark. 6, 21, 23. in which kind of lolemmites, they tide to a moint themselves with force optiments? as on the other fate, in dayes of forcow, they abstained from them, 25 am, 14, 3, 20 at. 23. Prov. 10. -7. Joh 18, 17. But the name of good men to the contract of the contra remains behind them, as the fweet favour of a precious perfume, when the substance of the perfume it felf is consumed with the fire: or as spices when they are broken and dissolved, leave an excellent sent behind them. And so the meaning is, That although the day of birth be a day of Feafting and joy, and the day of death a day of forrow and mourning: yet unto a good man this is much better than the other, and the memorial! which he leaves behind him, is much fweeter than that of fpices or perfumes. If we take the latter clause alone, without connexion to the former, then they relate unto the many va-nities and vexations which the life of man is exposed unto, in which consideration, That day which delivers a man from them, is better than that day which lets him into the possession of them; for man is born unto much trouble and forrow, Job 5.7. & 14. V.7. Surely opperfilm maketh a wife man mad. &c.] This may be understood two different wayers: I That even wife men when they see innocence opperfield, and violence prevail instead of justice, or when they themselves are untighteously opperfied, are ice, or when they themselves are unrighteously opperfield, are freeby much finkern and discomposed, tempted to passions administration against so great disorder, Plalm 73 2, 3, 8, 133 21. 2. Oppression, (i,) wealth gotten by oppression, maketh a wife man mad When a wife man turneth oppression, and feeth bribes and gists come in apace he becometh mad in greediness to get more, or mad in violence against his poor neighbours. or mad in his understanding; his eye is blinded, his heart is infatuared and beforted, he is bereft of his wonted wildom, ruining his family when he thinks to raile and to establish it; and so gifts do destroy his heart, (i.) his understanding, Hos. 4 11. Deut. 16. 39, EMOR, 25, O. EMIRET RETILE WILL COMBIL WELL WITH THE ROPE OF the wife man in the whole connext, which is 'to perfivade unto patience against fictfulinelle, when opportiours' grow rich, and run maddingafter gain, and to direct them to wait quitely and obferve the end of luch men, (as David allo directeth; Plalm 37, 37, 38, 07, 32, 17.) and not to beak forth into anger and madding the properties of t nelle at the present disorder which we conceive to be in these things.

V. 8. Retter is the end of a thing, than the beginning, &c.] This maxime holds in many things. The beginnings are difficult and painfull, the end fruitfull, and rewards those pains; as in the fludies of learning, in the wayes of vertue, in the bearing of afflictions, &c. Heb. 13. 11. On the other side, the beginnings of vice seem sweet and pleasant, but they end in bitternelle, like the role that was fweet in the mouth, but bitter in the belly, Rev. 10, 9, 10, 2. Sam, 2, 16. So in the bufinelle, a man may fuddenly enterprize fome great work, and glosy in the conceit of his abilities, who after comes off with shame, and is not able to finish it, for want of wildom to forecast events, Luke 13 18---- 32. I Reg. 20. 11. perfeverace is that which cowns and honours an enterprize, Matth. 10 22. Heb 3. 6. Rev 2. 36. Many begin in the spirit, who end in the sless, Gal. 3. 3. They after lay of the Devil, that he cannot change his feet. He can begin like a Saint, and transform himfelf into an angel of light; but he will flill end like himfelf. But though this be appliable many wayes, yet here the scope of the Wise man is to Arm us with moderation of spirit against the present and prevailing oppressions which we meet with. Alevil thereby, yet do not dispond, nor give over watering upon God, do not look onely on the present face of things: but patiently expect what issue he will give; go on in his way be not difmayed nor affeighted from any good purpofe; many times the end is comfortable, when the beginnings are troublesome. and they who fowed in teares, do reap in joy, Pfalm 126 5, 6, Pfalm 73, 17, Jam 5.11, Heb. 10, 36, 37, Phil, 4, 5, Ifaiah 10, 12,

V. 16. Be not righteous overmuch] Some would have this spoken in the name, and according to the judgement of carnal Realon, as a politick precept unto neutrality and indifferency in good courles, feeing piety and righteousnesse doth so often expose men unto danger, be not therefore over-forward and religious, over-wife and scrupulous; be not so inflexible upon grounds of conscience, remit a little of thy strictnesse, and accommodate thy felf to the exigence of times and circumstances, slacken thy hand, strike sail, loofen the rudder bonds in a tempest. Why shoulds thou unnecessarily expose thy self unto danger? But I rather conceive that the name of the mean is here given to the extream, for a man may many times do a thing conscienciously, and upon an opinion of duty, and thereby involve himself in much trouble and danger, when over-wife, as if thineown private judgement were ground enough to regulate all thy behaviours by, flatter not thy felt in any opinionaive confidence of thine own ability to judge of all that is fit to be tive confidence of thine own ability to judge of all that is it to the done, but think foberly of the Jeff, Rom. 12, 3. Some apply, this against too much rigor and feverity in centuring of men for unjust, when we fee them perion, grounded upon the defining of the former verse. But I rather take it for, a Caution and direction to moderate our zeal with prudence leaft it bring upon us the forementioned danger, Matth. 10. 16. V. 4. Where the word of a King is, there is power ; and who may far unto him, What dost thou ?] Think not that thou shalt be able to escape the weath of a King: for if he but speak the word, he hath power enough to reach thee where ever thou gooft : where ever the command of a King comes, it is accompanied with power enough to be averaged on any that provoke him; He never wants inftruments to execute his displeasure. When Saul pronounced death upon the Priess, there wanted not a Doeg to set upon them.

V. 6, 7. Because to every purpose, there is a time and judgement therefore the misery of man is great upon him; For he knoweth not that which shall be: for who can tell him when it shall be ?] Because to wavelengths or enterprize there is a proper feating, and peculiar manner of acting, upon which narrow points, the happy fuccelle of fuch underskings do depend, and this cannot without much wildom be duly observed: hence it consent to palle, that the mi-Cey of man is great upon him. This general Is to be applyed to the pattential calle, am and by incurring the dipleatine of his Pince, bringeh much milecy upon himlels, because he wanted: that wild down which flould diagest a proper opportunity, and right way of regaining his favour again. When there is ignorance and folly within, dangers and fnares without, it is very hard for a mante walk fafely. There is no greater part of wildom than the prudent observing of times, circumstances, and the right manner of transa-Ging bufineffes that are of weight and confequence unto us, Jer. 8. 7, 8. Amos 5. 13, Luke 19. 44, Prov. 15. 23. Act. 22. 25 -- 29. Act. 23. 6, 7. for he knoweth not that which shall be. 1 Because a man cannot time, any other way of proceeding, would miscarry: great there-fore must needs be the miscry of man by reason of this ignorance, who hash a thousand waves to miffe the mark, and but one to his it. A man cannot fo much as fore-appoint his own actions for the Onely this a wife and holy man may be fure of, that whatever falls our shall he for his good, though it may be contrary to his defire and expectation, 1 Cor. 3, 22.

V. 8. There is no man that hath power over the spirit, to retain the fpirit, neither hath he power in the day of death] By fpirit, he meaneth the breath of life, or the foul. So it is often understood, Gen. 6. [fulnesse, Prov. 18, 12, 28, Pfal, 12 8, even in that city where they had 19. Job 7.7. 1fa 42.5. Pfal 104. 29. Luke 8. 55. Jam. 2. 26. This may be understood, I. Generally, to signific the weakness which is in man to help himself against the greatest surure evil, namely, death; no power, industry, wildom, can keep the foul, when God by death requires it: no man hath the dominion over his own life, to live as long as it pleafeth himfelf; nor over death, to repell and refift it when it comes, Plat. 49.7 .- 10. Heb. 9.27. 2 Particularly, to the present argument of obedience to Princes, whose yvrath is as the roaring of a Lyon, whole displeasure cannot be avoyded. An offender hath no povver to retain his life, vyhen supreme authority passeth judgement against it: and therefore we ought wisely to take heed of those provocations which are likely to cash us under fo great danger : for the punishment of rebellion can no more be avoided, than the vvind can be held fast. Therefore vve ought to keep our selves still vvithin the bounds of duty, and that will preserve us from evil, as verse 5.

to retain the [pirit] To shut it in , to keep it from going avvay Neither hath he, or any man povver in the day , or , over , and against, the day of death to adjourne and prorogue it; equo pede pulfat pauperum tabernas , regumque turres. The povver of a King is as little against death, as the power of the meanest beggar. And therefore some have observed, that vyhereas vyhen David is mentioned upon other occasions, he is usually spoken of by name of King David; when his death is spoken of there is no mention of his dignity and office, but onely of his name, I Reg. 2. 1.

neither shall wichednesse deliver those that are given to it] Unquiet wickednesse, finful shifts, which men in danger are apt to betake themselves unto, though a man turn himself every way, and move every stone, yet he shall not be able to deliver himself; Saul and Pilate would fain shift off the guilt of their fins upon the people, I Sam. I, 1.1. Matth. 27, 24, and Caiphas pretended necessity for his perfecuting of Christ, Joh. 11, 50, but this did not deliver their fouls. By wickednesse, here may be understood, in relation to the argument of the text, Rebellion, Sedition, difobedience against Magistrates, as I Sam. 24. 13. The words are a urages, wickednesse shall not deliver, that is, It shall destroy those that use it; as Rom. 1. 16, Pfal. 51, 17. Prov. 17, 21.

V. 9. All this have I feen, and applyed mine heart unto every work, that is done under the fun: There is a time wherein one man ruleth over another to his own hart.] With his wonted transition he passets on to the observing of another Vanity, which was to be patiets on to the observing or another wanneys, which was to be found among then; I applyed or gave mine heart unto every work, as Chap, 7. 27, teaching us with special attention to ob-serve the wayes of Gods providence in the world, Psal, 111. 2. 1 Pet. 1.10, 11. When he was thus confidering of the right means of living comfortably, by yeilding due obedience unto Government : He found that some Princes were so tyrannical and intolerable, that it was very hard for men to live quietly under them, they go on without controll, and milerably afflict the poor people. they go on without controls, and miterany affect the poor people, Prov. 3.8. 15,16. for whole good and comfort they were appoint-ed, Rom. 13, 4. God thus pleafing in his Juffice many times to punish the fins of a Nation, by giving them up into the hands, and under the will of unrighteour Governours, Zach, 11,6. Hof. 13. 11. Job 34. 30. Ifa. 10,6. & 14. 27. & 19. 4. But he sheweth the vanity of such Tyrannical courses. They tend at last to the hurt of those that use them : the Rod which beateth the children , is usually at last thrown into the fire. As their power hath pur into their hands a greater liberty of finning, so hath it heaped up for them a greater measure of wrath, 1sa. 10, 12. Dan, 11, 36,---40.

V. 10. And of I am the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the Edy: and thoy were fugeriten in the city where they had so done: This is also wants. These words are obscure they had so done: This is also wants. These words are obscured from understanding the former spare? Wicked utulers, and the latest the state of th ter part of good rulers? others, the whole, onely of wicked ones. The sum of the former sense is this; When I considered the rule of Tyrants over others, I observed that when they were dead and butied, they did as it were come and return again in their children or wicked fuccessours, who reigned like them, Job 8, 18,19. or when they had been deprived and deposed, and so as it were buried, I saw them return to dominion again. But other good men, who had walked with God in his holy place, are driven out of fight, made to run into corners, and as it were buried in forger-done Right. This he looked on as a great Vanlty, that the memory of good men should perish; and wicked men should be had in honour. But the other fense which applyeth all to wicked Rulers, seemeth to be more genuine, and is followed by our Translation; I favy wicked Rulers continue all their life long in the place of the Holy one, to be had in great honour, and after they had gone in and out before the people in the place of Justice and Govern-ment, (which is in the Throne of God) I says them magnificently buried in very great pomp and foleranity, Luke 16.22, yet being dead, notwithstanding all those flatteries and formalicies in their funeral, their name and memories did quickly perish and dye with their bodies, infomuch, that in that very city where they had lived in fo great power, and been buried in fo much ftate; they were presently forgotten; neither the noblenesse of their fa-milies, nor the flatteries of their creatures, nor the magnificent monuments creded for them, were able to preferve their names monuments elected to taken, yet of sold to potent enter names from rottennedle, y Pal 37,9,10,35,36. Prov. 10. 7. By the place of the Holy, or of the Holy one, os Hab 3, 3, understand the tribunals of Judgement, whereon they fit as his Vicegerents, Deut. 1, 17, Pfal, 82.1. Exod-22, 28, 1 Chron, 29, 23, 2 Chron, 19 6. By coming and going, feems to be intimated the administration of the publick office of Government, elsewhere expressed in the like manner, by going in and out before the people, Numb. 27, 17. Deut.31.a. 1 Reg.3.7.

And they were forgotten] The Septuagint render it, and they were praifed; upon an easie militake of one letter for another in the Oriwhere they had so done] Others, where they had done right, in the first of the two former senses, we dique neateries, as Symmachus: or whatsoever they did was accompted Right, and fo it is applyable to the latter fenfe. This is also Vanity] All the power and pomp of weicked men in their Life, and funerals, is but meer Vanity, fince when they are gone, their names and memorials perish with them.

V. II. Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily: therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evill.] Here is intimated the Reason why wicked Rulers go on without remorfe or controll in their tyranny and oppression all their life long; namely, because the Judgements of God threatned against them, are not presently put in execution. The prosperity of wicked men doth exceedingly ftrengthen and harden them in their wickednesse. This proceedeth from infidelity, and a roce of atheilme in their hearts, they cannot fee afar off, or if they do. ver because evil feems far from them, therefore they go on securey, abusing the goodnesse and long-suffering of Godunto pre-umption, which should have led them unto repensance,

V. 14. There is a vanity which is done upon the earth] He doth not pass this centure upon the wile and righteous providence of God, who ordereth all the seeming confusions and disorders which are in the world, and who is pleased after a seeming inequality to dispence good or evil unto men, contrary to what our reason doth judge most equal and righteous, Job 9, 22, & 21, 7, 8. But first he ipeaketh according to the judgement of flesh and blood, which is apt to judge hardly of so strange a distribution, Psal 73, 13, 14, 2. He doth it, to frew the vanity of all outward things which do variously happen unto men under the Sun, which being distributed without any great difference, fometimes evil things to good then, and good things to evil men, do lead us necessarily to think but meanly of them, and to look after a further Judgement, ywherein revvards and punishments shall be in a more notable wherein reverses and punishing that he in a more notable manner dispenced, Chap. 7 15. 1 Co. 15. 19. And even in this distribution there is much goodness shewed to one man in his sufferings, whereby his graces exercised: and much weath and furtice to others in their prosperity, whereby they are many times hardened and ensured, Pfal. 69.22 Hol. 13 6.

N the end of the former Chapter, the Wife man observed the IN the end of the former Chapter; the wife man observed the feerer and hidden course of Gods providence; and in this proceeds in the same argument, taking notice of a consusted doministration of the world in the the common Events which does qually befall both the good and the bad, even as death at the last happeneth to them all alike, verfe 1,2,3. Whereupon herefumeth his former remedy against this Vexation, to wit, that we should comfortably enjoy life, and the good things thereof, while we have time to do it, and not defer it till it be too late, because when death comes, it deprives us of all the comforts and delights which this present life doth afford unto us : upon which occasion he praiseth life besore death, because therein we have the liberty of enjoying all good things under the Sun, the fense of all which, Death doth Hereave us of , verle 4,5,6. And therefore fincethe dayes of our life are but Vanity, we ought with much cheertulines and intention of mind to enjoy all the liveet contentments which life doth afford us, yet fo, as not to leave the duties of our Calling undone, this being all the portion which we can have in this life of all our labours, verfe 7,8,9,10. After which he falleth into the contemplation of another wonderful providence of God, whereby events feem to befall men rather by chance, than by reason and counfell, and contrary to those previous dispositions by which we are led to expect far different effects from those which do come to paffe, verse 11. The reason whereof in part he subjoyns, namely, that invincible ignorance which is in all men of the proper featons wherein actions are to be done, or elfe difability to foresee and prevent the eyils which are coming towards them, and do fuddenly furprize them, verse 12 Laftly, left he should feem to diftate unto us a supine neglect of all good means towards our defired Ends, in regard that things seem to be governed rather by chance, than by councel, He showeth the excellent use of godly wildom to deliver us out of fuch dangers, by an example of One poor, but wife man, who being in a little City meanly man'd and defended, did by his wildom deliver it from the power and military assaults of a mighty King which came against it. IN the latter end of the former Chapter , he shewed the excel I lent use of Godly wisdom in order unto tranquility, both private and publick, and the mischief which one fool might do in de-Vare and publics, and it filled which last chapter, he pro-ceedeth in the beginning of this, to demonstrate by three instaneccects in the beginning of this, to demonstrate by three inflan-ers, thewing first how folly defroyers a good name, which he illu-frareth by an excellent similitude, verse 1 secondly, how it stopols a man sactions and understakings, which by wildow might be devectorally managed, yere 2. Thirdly, How it defacet ha mans whale behaviors, and convestion, verse 2. Then he proceede the other the excellent use of true wisdom,

The right hand is usually the most expedite and ready for action, doth its work more furely, more speedily, more decently, therefore the right hand is the dearest of the two, Matth 5, 29,30, and it is noted as a thing strange and unusual when men have been left-handed, and counfel he doth with mature advice and deliberation fo weigh his actions; the circumstances, consequences, probabilties, and events of them, as that he miy not afterwards repent of his behaviour therein. 22. Luke 14.28 -- 30. But a tool is left-handed in his works, doth all his businesse bunglingly, preposterously, inconsiderately, ei-ther, when he adviseth about businesse, his hand is absent, and doth not execute it; or when he worketh and goeth about it, his heart is abfent, and doth not direct it. A wife man hath the command of his hear, knowes how to use it seasonably, opportunely, and in conformity to times, places, persons, so that his undertakings may be successful and prosperous a whereas a sool is transported with passion, amazed at difficulties, perplexed with uncertainties, at his wits end, and knowes not which way to take, or what to resolve, goes about his businesse as awkwardly and undewhat to relotve, goes about his bulinene as awkwarday and minde-cently, as a man would do whole right hand were tyed behind him, and had onely his lelt hand to help him, Prov. 1. 10.—15. & 4. 26. & 13. 16. & 16. 22, 23. If the spirit of the Ruler) The Chaldee hereby understandeth
the power and dominion of any ruling lust, by which a man should not suffer himself to be shaken from his stedfastnesse, nor removed out of his place, or from his duty. But this is incon-fonant with the feries of this Chapter, which is much taken up in the Errours of Government, and the inconvenient paffions which those Errors may produce in the minds of the people. Others understand it of the spirit of Rule and Government, as we often neutaman o the pirit on Aute and Ooveriment; as we often read of the fight of Judgement, of prophecy of Revelation, of wildom, of knowledge, fo the skill of Governing, is called the Spirit of God. 1 Sam. to, Otl. & 11.6 & 16.14. It is of all other, the most excellent Moderator and director of the actions of life; because without it, all other means are bootlesse and full of hazard : without it labour is dangerous; there is wisdom reof hazard: without it labour is gangerous; tieler is windom re-quilite in the most ordinary and meanest works; in digging, in bearing burdens, in cleaving and hewing of wood; as we read of a Porter, whom a Philosopher took and bred unto learning, because he observed a natural wildom and dexterity, in his ordering of his burden for the more casie carriage; I Reg. 5. 6. Without it, eloquence is to no purpofe, for unleffe a man have wisdome to charm a Serpent before he bite, all a mans eloquence afterward will not be able to heal him,

V. 11. Sarely a Serpent will bite without enchaptment, and a babler is no better] Or, If the Serpent bite without being charmed, or before he be charmed there is then no profit to him that is a mafter of his tongue, or an eloquent man. A mans eloquence will do him no good, after the Serpent hath bitten him; except he do wifely charm him, before the danger be come. The meaning is, that a man should by meeknesse of wisdome, asby a charm, allay the displeasure of the Ruler against him , before it break forth, and be too late to pacific him. Or, according to the scope of our version, A wise man should, by mecknesse and discretion, charm his own bitter tongue, and spirit of detraction, whereby he is apt to curse and revile the Ruler of the people. Such a vain babler, whose lawlesse rongue is ever finding fault with government, and speaking evil of dignities, is no better than an uncharmed Serpent, Pfal, $8.4,5. Rom. 3.13. Or, As a Serpent bites most dangerously, which bites without hissing, doth not give warning of the harm, that a man might flye from it; so of all enemies. a feerer derraftor is the worft.

The scope is, 1. To compare the spirit of disloyalty and murmuring in the people against their Rulers, (so often forbidden, Exod 21.28. Ad. 23.4. Jude verle 12. 1 Per. 2.23.) unto the biting of a Serpent, every rebellious and trayterous speech against those who are over us by Gods ordinance and in his stead, is full of deadly poylon, Ezek 2. 6. a fin which the querulous disposition of people is very apt to transport them into, Exod, 15,24, & 16.

The former sense seemeth

rightest.
V. 15. The labour of the fool wearieth every one of them, be cause he knoweth not how to go to the City.] Having shewed the many attempts of foolish men, both in deeds and words, He here discovereth the vanity and fruitlesnesse of them all, All his and ancoverent the vanney and remember to stem all, All his boading projects and undertakings prove but labout in vain. As the Sodomites being finiteen with bindnesse, wearied themselves to find out the doos, which they could not get to, Gen 19. 11. He tyreth and weariest out himself in matters which are most easie, and yet cannor overcome them : for even children can fine out the way into a City when they are neer unto it. Or, though he have not wit end by to keep a high rode, yet he will be wearying of himself in abstruce things, which are as difficult as to forefee hitter and contingent events, as in the former erle.

The sense seemeth to be much like that, verse 10. asthere the fool puts to all his frength to cleave knotty wood with blunt tooles, and all in vain; whereas a little wildom to whet his Iron, would make his work both more easie, and more effechual : fo here the fool, like an ignorant Traveller that hath miffed his way, goes up and down to little purpose, till he quite weary himself, and yet can never find the way into the City for want of skill, or a guide to direct him, which otherwise would have want of skill, or a guide to direct nim, which otherwise would have been moft ediffy and speedly done. Where wildom is wanting to direct out actions; Jabour will be endtelle, we shall soone want our selves, than effect any thing by blind endeavours. Chap. xii.

The former sense seems most pertinent, because in this verse, is a general description of the mileries of old age, the particular specification whereof followes in the reft. For as Usurers, before the whose debt is paid, so fetch away some good parts of it for the loan; so before the debt of death be paid by the whole body, Old age doth, by little and little, take away Sometimes one Sence, sometimes another, this yeare one Limb, the next another; and caufeth a man, as it were, to dye daily. No Sunne can dispell the clouds and forrows of 22. 16.

These pipes are haply here compared unto the street, or palage down into feverall parts within the body, which have doors or covers, that open one way, and thut another way when we ear and drink, that our food may go right to the stomack, and nor awry to the lungs. These doors in old age, are, through weakness, that up, and as it were off from their hinges, do not so pliantly and readily, do their proper office, as they were wong to do. Whence difficulty of swallowing, and difficulty of speaking; unrowhich two, most of the interpretations of this place, may be referred. Some by the two doors, underfand the eye-lids, when they are weak, and hang down over the eyes. Others, All the fenfes, which are the outward doors, by which objects enter, and are admitted to the foul, All which, in old age, are to weakned, and unufeful, that they do very little fervice.

The next clause, seems most to favour that sense, which by doors! understands the passages of the meat, down into the stomach, and of the voice from the lungs, unto both which uses, the teeth are greatly subservient.

when the found of the grinding is low). This some apply unto hear-ing, when that grows weak. When the teeth are gone, the lips are compressed the mouth falls down, the organs of feeding and speaking are much disabled. They who take the former clauses literally, joyn the senles thus together. Old men flay within doors, and walk little abroad because the seasonal of official rapetite and digition dorft cause them one at itsele, whereby their ftrength is much abated, neither do they for this reason care to go to feaths, or merry meetings, all delites and delights being in them wholly decayed and

By these desects we are instructed in the dayes of our youth, to open all the doors of our heart to let Christ in, that in old age he may be with us, and when our appetite faileth us, he may sup with us, Revel 3. 20, and when our fleep faileth us, he may give us reft; and when all other delights are worn out, a good conscience may be a continual feast, 15. 15. and may give fongs in the night, Job 35.10, Eph. 5. 19. First, There is no End of writing them; while one refutes what another wrote, another vindicates what his advertary diffiked. If happinelle were to be fought for in humane writings; The Volums are lo infinite, the opinions fo andioffo and various, that it would be imposlible impossible for any man to finde it out of them; when a man had with much curiofity and continuall reading wearied him-felt, and pined his fleth away, he well'd finde it all an unprofitable, and an impertinent labour, wearinefle to the body, without any fatistaction to the mind. Therefore let the words, to few, and yet to full be thy confictions: He that will not be admonished by those, shall never be satisfied with any others: He that results the whear, will be choaked with the chaff. Well may we say unto this one Shepherd, as Peter did, Lord, to whom thall we gae? thou half the words of eternal life, John 6, 68, These onely are the Writings which make us wife unto falvation, and doe furnish us throughly unto all good workes, 2 Timothy, 3, 17, 17, Others, are sifefull, in their Order 1 These onely are the Rule of Faith

V. 43. Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter; Fear God, and keep his Commandements: for this is the whote dutie of a man j Or, The whole End of the matter; or, the Summe and substance of the whole matter is heard; The discourse of mans happinelle, which in this Book I have undertaken, is at an and no more need be faid of it; The fumme of all is comprized in their two words; Fear Oad, Keep bis companion in scompilized in their two words; Fear Oad, Keep bis companion must be all man needs, to lead an happy life.

Let us bear the consiglion by the whole matter] This is an Exordium to flire up attention; I will in two words give you an Abridgement of all that can be faid; therefore take ipsciall heed to remember them. The Verse begins with a great Let-ter in the Original 1, which is as Buxtors, in his Tiberias notes, to excite the more heed and attention, the whole summe of the duty of man, being contained in this short saying, wherein he only on man, being comment in the host symbol or observed the tight order; for fifth, be begins with the internal roso of all obtedience and worfhip, which is, a filiall, reverend, awdill, and loving fair of Go' and his goodnefile in the heatt. Holean 3 through the proceeded unto the fair which growth out of this root of filial fear and love, the different which growth out of this root of filial fear and love, the different processing the state of the filial which growth out of this root of filial fear and love, the different processing the state of the stat abroad in the heart, which is an equall, uniform, conflant, universall observing of his Commandements; of all of them his mercies, and your conformitie to his Will.

Thus to fear God, and to keep his Commandement, is the whole of man; About this thould he spend all the strength of his thoughts and cares; This is the funme of all, which man can, after all his writing, teading, studying, inquiring, in oc der unto happyride attain unto; This is the offer and the happitest of man, or, all the means which man can use to come unhamiltant with the A. This is he before and the to happinelle at the last : This is the basis, and bottome of all that perfection which man is capable of a It is the whole durie of man, and the duty of all men that will be happy, lob

This, necessarily, takes in the Doctrine of Faith in Christ, because without him we can doe nothing, by Faith in him the heart is purified to scar and love God, and by that fear and love it is inclined to obey his Commandements, 1 Iohn 3 5. lohn 14, 12.

The Argument.

T will not be needfull to say much concerning this Book by way of Presace, because such things at are usually delivered so, will be very proper for the explication of the first verse of it, which us a compensions Presace to all the verse so, which is a compensions Presace to all the verse so, and contains under it not onely the Nature and Author of it, but also the matter, time, occasion, end, and marries, and contains under it not onely the Nature and Author of it, but also the matter, time, occasion, end, and many other circumflances, which are the common business of an Argument. All that needs of Introduction here, will ny other circumstances, which are the common employed and to vindicate them from rash and harder cessates, which be rather for the Amostations sake, than for any thing essentially and to vindicate them from rash and harder cessates, which they are apt to meet with. It is not unknown to the learned, what the obscuritie and durkness of this Book hath ever been they are apt to meet with. It is not unknown to the learned, what the obscurite and durkness of this Book hath ever been accounted, and what great varietie of Interpreters, and Interpretations have endeavoured to clear it, but with fall fuccols, many times, that they have rather increased, than removed the Cloud: whilest among so many hundreds of them, vecess, many simes, that they have rushes increases, when semoved his commentative whose year under subject to the few blave done any thing left than what they pretended, and of all these ancien and later Volumes, and Libraries of Commentative, we find a very final number that are answered either to their own undertakings, or the Readers hopes. It is agreed on all bands, that the Book is usive Allegory, fall of profound mysteries, and served facers of which easile the sewes intendited the reading of it, as of the first Chapter of full of profound mysteries, and served facers of Exckicl, until the age of thrite years, (which was their Sacerdot all age) when reason should conclude the description of the served facers of t be grown upon, and the affections composed, and raised for so Druine a Contemplation: For such they essented it generally, though both among them, as well as other Readers, there were some that had lower conceptions of it, and received is it is an hot carnal pamphlet, formed by some loofe Apollo or Cupid, rather than the holy inspiration of the true God. It is very easie for all men to erre even in plain things of this nature, how much more in Parables and riddles? Where no Interpretation can be so such cere and indemnified at to please all conjectures, or to fatisfie the various interest and spirits that inquire into them : But cere and indemnified at to pleafe all conjectures, or to fatisfic the various interests and spirits that inquire into them: But in G Catholick, a confent and harmouse as batch born writted to this way, though in some particulars and single clause; it may be the E ate of the massing preparations to be surprised, as it way be the E ate of the massing incomes to be surprised, as it will seem considerable to see and single seems to depart from it, and to choose sold single seems and implications, and volcaces offered to the Word and Truth ? And so shall he that consider sind it to have hapned not only to those of the Church of Rome, who have doted upon fach inventions, but also to many of the reformed Churches, who have for faken all guides, but their own phancie and interest in this work. And indeed how could it prove otherwise ? For when men are grown proud desdainers of others, and propose to themselves a separate Notion, which they resolve to defend, what hold improbable, in solent things thers, and propose to inemserves a separate receion, which they not obtinue, which will ravishit, and by an and actions will they not obtinue, and instead of an humble submission and respect to the Text, will ravishit, and by an and actions forces compel and wrest it to comply with them? This fault as I said, we may lament in many of great pairing Jorce's compet and wrest is to comply with them (100) into the 1 joins, we may consert in many of great parties of the wrise, among us, that were transported with strange abstruct applications of this Scripture, and have presumed to determine all things in it so and so, as if they had been of the Divine Counsel, and knew all his secrets, by reason of termine all things in it so and so, as if they had been of the Divine Counsel, and knew all his secrets, by reason of which presumption, we may fadly fear that it pleased Gad to give them up many times to themselves, and permit them to produce such opinions as are both ridiculous, and impions. He must remember that Allegories are not to be strained too much, that similitudes answer not in all lines, but in the cheifest, that many deep things concerning the Church lye hid in this Scripture, and in the Prophett, which are not yet fulfilled, nor discovered and that what remaines for the last times to be accomplish, is yet as sulf of darknesse as wonder; known to God only, and until the what remaines for the last times to be accomplish, is yet as sulf of darknesse as wonder; known to God only, and until the shall please to detendent it, unsearchable. He must remember lastly, that one part of his duty is as great as another, that it concernes him to be wife unto sobriety, as well as to be wife; to open doubtfull and intricate Scriptnes with modesty that it concernes tom to be wife unto journety, as well as to be rije; to open ambigual and intricate Scriptures with modely and moderation; that is according to the Andlogy of Faith, the general peace and unity of the Church, and those Christians of Canons of charits, picty, logalty, and prudence, which tends not to subversion, but to edifying: All which none are so likely toobserve as they who most support the melevers, and proceed in that beautifull trast, which the seet of the Prophete bave both indightned, and made smooth; which in this businesse and our bands, is to look upon it, as generally it is acknown. ledged, that is, not as an hiffory, or prophecy (as some conceive it) but as a divine Parable, wherein naturall and visible things allegorize things supernaturall, and under the figures of Solomon and his Love, is shadowed the true Prince of peace, and his rich affections to his Church and people. And this is that genuine and fpirituall explication, which as it is peace, and his rich affections to his Church and people. V,2. Let him kiffe me] In this Drama, or Dialogue it is confented on all hands, that these first words are spoken by the Church; who is the wife of the Lamb in contract, Revel, 21, 9, who faw Christ, to whom she is to be presented in perfect glory hereaster, afar off; and here defireth neerer union and fellowship with him. The Hebrew Doctors, with the Chaldee Paraphrale, would have Mofes and his law and righteoufness understood in him; but we know that there is none in the earth or in Heaven to be fought and loved fo as our Lord, who answereth and fils up the name of Solomin nects to a out a consympto answers and us up the name of Salomb better than any of his fervants, though never fo faithful in his houfe, as Moft was, B Mo, it is more diffused who is intended. One will have it to be the Queen of Sheba, who came to vife So-London from a fix country, and by whom [as the tradition of the Aismon from 1 to the was got with childe for her civility, from which childe for her civility, from which childe they derive Prefer-John, who to this day writes himfelf the fon of Solomon; the Jews, they will have it to be their fynagogue: some Christians, the humane nature by incarnation, or by his re-furcation at least. The sublimated Papist wiredrawes all to the blefled Virgin, and it is excellent sport to read their distortions and bendings of wix and learning to effect it. But certum off, and de fide off, that no particular person or creature is to be understood, but the whole Catholique Church of Christ, (and under her wings eyen, single and individual believer) from Adam and Abel to the last period of time, for whose sake the son of God was made man, to sanctific, and redeem her, and make her a glorious Church; And fo the humane nature of Christ is not the Spouse, but the Bride-groom, which Christ is not as God only, but as Man too; and whose love and fruition the Church here petitions for, for these are not

V. 15. Behold thou are fair my love] Or my Companion neer-eft and dearest to me: in these soit and gracious words Christ congratulateth his Church, and declares his sweet goodnesse and are below the belly, in women alone wife nature hath placed them above upon the breafts, in the fight, between their arms and nigh their lips; that loas they have a better convenience of imclemency in accepting and encouraging those graces which himbracing and cherifining their tender infants, fo likewise their babes elemency in accepting and encouraging time graces which mis-flef giveth: They are but weak and imperfect, yet he praifeth and cherisheth them; and by praising he perfects his own work; For Locatto verbi infusio doni, to call her tair, is to make her so; to own her for his love, is both to insufe something that may be may delight and comfort them with their pretty looks and killes: Thus doth the foul both testing her love and loyalty to Christ, by giving him the part he defireth, and likewife receives more benefit and grace from him: For Christ lodged in the heart loved in her, and that may excite her to love him the more; For both humbles and revives it, and as a bundle of myrrhe is both fiver and bitter at once, so doth he preserve in our hearts both loved in her, and that may excue not to be find the more; for whom God loveth, he maketh fair and like himfelf; drawing nigh them, and reflecting comlinesse and beauty upon them, which are the participation and effect of his love and holinesse; that is, of joy and trembling together. If our hearts fail us, finell at this sweet bundle, and it will transmit life and comfort: If his beauty : contrary to the manner of men, among whom beauty they swell too high, and are grown proud taste and chew the bitter plant of his death and passion, it will subdue and break raifeth and perswadeth love; but divine love is the cause of buter plant of his death and passion, it will subdue and break he impossibuter. There he many excellent properties of myrhe received by Dissentiar, and others, but far short of this matchelle Drug, which healted all our disclass; and is both in adversity, and prosperity whatesome, if applied as it should be. thou hast dover eyes] The special part chosen for praise, is the eye, which should be (not proud, lustful, envious, wanton, &c, but) like those of the dove that is, meck, humble, pure, peaccable, chaste, fixed upon God, and by an holy intention waiting on him for life and devotion: Cupids in the eye are not fo glotious, as dores; they make us like him who descended in the shape of a Dove, and dearer to him than the apple of his own eye : fo that they which hurt us, and have evil eyes at us, shall have theirs plucked out, whilst ours shall be his sacrifice and his delight. It accomplished with all the drammens of without and rectelling the confided themselves puzzled in it: It is not necessary nor profitable, I start, to complain here against their boldenselve, and as little necessary to discuss, or rehearst the several opinion concerning this Scripture. Behold thow art fair my beloved | This is the Churches return, wherein the modestly gives back to Christhis own praise, who is much more to be admired: Her beauty is but the restellation For which cause some conceive it to be a kind of vine; but that is uncertain; junsflet they mean by vine, that spiritual one, which growth John 15,1. and on which grow full clusters of grases, that is, abundance and plenty of all faving mercy and grace, and lore, and of all true joy and comfor; which he limitelle preside for us, when he trod the when grefte alone, and under whole droppings alone, we enjoy plenty and and image of his; hers is but the fiream, the drops, he hath an Ocean from which hers is derived: and therefore (faith she) No wonder if I be feeing thou art from all mine is for thee: and if any thing deferve to be called fo in me, it is thy gift made it fo: fo grateful is faith, and fo quick-fighted too; beholding excellency in Christ whom the world despiteth, and destring to behold that as the onely thing the can feek after all the dayes of her life, Pfal.

> alfo our hold green] Some copies of the L XX, großely miflake here, which read each sahrbu, as if mpbe were a prepofition, whereas it is a ultal conjunction, and as much as expenfittenermers, or besides: but this knot is not so hard as the other, what is meant by bed here. One sayes the Virgins womb, another the Humane nature, another the Grave of Christ; others the the Scriptures, in which the unquiet brains of men, toffed with fewerd opinions, reft as in a bed; others fay, a good, opicience is this flowry-bed; others, faith, working by love, and an holy life, whole flereigh is alwayes green, and truiful. The ligh-flown Contemplators of the Roman Church build their idle Abbeys, and Monasteries upon this word, but this phancy is too green and cannot indure. Some of our own eminent Divines conceive that the Ordinances of Christ are this Bed, wherein the Lord and the Church do shew forth, by a reciprocal Action, their loves one to another: wherein they imbrees, and give mutual returns of grace and duty one to another; which dear interchanges are relembled to killes, and are faild to be alwayse green, and flourishing, because they increase by this communion, and wither not, until they bring the foul to a perfect communion of the villogs and fruiction of God for ever, when a man shall fee him as he is, and shall be ever with the Lord : which indeed, is the principal and palmary argument of this whole Book, whole maine scope and stream runs fully upon this increasing and perfecting of communion with Christ; and the ardent foul frives mightily after this one thing, as if the could never get near enough to Christ, nor Christ were never near enough to her : An heavenly and Angelical temper, to pursue and hunt after Christ, and the most intimate fellowship with him, as the highest of all priviledges. I think the most solid explication is be fides the Metaphor to find another Trope here, by which Bed is put for the fruit or issue of the bed, as is used many times; and is called green, not by reason of the colour but the sertility, or groweth; which was fo wonderful upon the heavenly conjunction Chift and his Church, that the number of Believers increafed miraculoufly; fo that we read of three thouland, and five thousand converted and baptized at one time; which was not the bleffing of her youth onely, but of her old age; for that also is green and flourishing to this day; especially if we will believe the Roman Account and Registers, who boast of above two hundred thousand Ethiopians reduced in one year, by the Jefuits to their Church : It was a large harvest if it were fo ; but yet no more than the Lord of the harvest can gather when he pleaseth, nor than he hath promifed to gather, when he will be praifed among much people.

V. 17. The beams of our boufe] The last words and these seem to be a symphony, or chorus both of Chits and the Church, wherein they consent together, and with united delight, extol the Fabrick, and parts of the church, which is the house of God, Tim. 3. 15. whereof the holy Scriptures held forth by the Prophets and Apostles are as the beams, principal and strong pieces; and those beams are like cedars, which are the most excellent of trees for height, ftrength, sweetnesse, continuance, and all other noble properties. It is written by Pliny and others, that the Temple of Diana at Ephelus (which was four hundred years before it was finisht) had doors and gates of cedar, which looked then as fresh and beautiful, as if but newly made. This is nothing to the stability and glory of the Church, which shall never rot fo; as to become fub ject to utter corruption, but her members shall flourish, and indure as the cedar, 1/fal. 92. 13. Number 24. 5, 6, All poy-fonous and corrupt lumous shall be purged out, and the shall be as a rock that cannot be shaken for ever.

and our rafters of fire] The word for rafters may expresse galleries, or walks, or cloysters, or roofs, as the Vulgar Latine: leries, or walks; or cloyiters, or roots, as the Viligar Latine: It fignifies allo guttars, or watering troughs, ufed by the Eaftern shepherds, Gen. 30, 38. But the other word which we Engard for the control of the c way, who turn the Hebrew word inte Latine, and read their 1773 Brutas, which is not much unlike; and so do Symmachus and Aquila in the Greek: If it be that tree which some Expositors strive for, out of Dioserdies and Pliny, it is an utter stranger to the Western world, but of admirable worth, both for beauty and odour: Which odour they rell us, in reafeth by burning, and therefore they used it as they did incense, in Sacrifices. Let the literal figure and name of it be what it will, it flands here a worthy Hieroglyphick of spiritual mysteries, which are of greater pleafure than galleries built of most costly and odoriferous wood and that pleasure is made more and greater when kindled and warmed by the flames of holy zeal and love.

CHAP. II.

"His Chapter is begun with a shore character and description of Christ by himself, to which he annexeth such another of the Church; who inflamed by his praifes and love, diffuserh her gratitude into an ample Panegyrick, and an exhortation to the particular Churches, both to know and pleafe him: whose care and mindfulneffe of her, and her fecurity from enemics, quick netly her again to freer professions of her Faith and Hope.

Verfe : Am the rofe or the flower, or bud of the rofe, which is the Prince of flowers, both hot beauty and form, and most fifty represente the Chirl, whose words these are, (not the Churches as some have chought) and in comparison of whom moshing should be sweet or delightful to us, for he is the glory and ornament of his Church, whose beauty and sweemelle shall never fade. He is despited and trod upon by the wilde beatts of the world, but the Saints honour him, and wear him in their hearts, and deck their fouls with his graces and benefits, as with chapters of immortal roles.

of Sharon] The vulgar Latine read, Of the field, which errour they cannot excuse, for Sharon is memorable not onely here, but in other Texts; and being a rich and pleasant Campaigne, or open Countrey, running under Lebanon, not far from Nazareth Joppe, may feem to infinuate both the place of Christs common relidence in the dayes of his flesh, and that where S. Peter laid fome of the first stones of the Churches building; but especially represents the Church, and her glory, whereof Sharon is a goodly

and the lilly] Or violet; Indeed the names of flowers in Scrip ture are not proper fo much as promifenous, and one of them is common to many forts, but this here being derived from UU, which fignifies fix, is most properly construed a lilly, which opens into fix leaves, and is the noblest and chiefest of flowers next the role, furpassing in her native gallantry all Solomons bravery, Marth 6, 29, and repreferting Christ in purity, humility, and sweetnesse.

of the valleys] Or torrents, which run among the valleys and bottoms; making them fat and fruitful; to that as the great Secretary of Nature speaks of the Lilly , Una radix quinquagens fape bulbs emitin; fo the God of nature delights in the humble, regards their low effact to bleffe it, and give more grace, that they may (like the wealthy valleys) rejoyce and fing, when they are covered over with corn, Pfal. 64. 13. Many great cities of the world have received their names from flowers, as Shuftan in Perfa, Florence in Italy, &c. But the city of God deferves to be called fo, being his Sharon and Carmel, in which the true Rose and Lilly flourish, and no where elfe; nay being his Eden and Paradile, wherein the second Adam will give the tree of Life and Knowledge to all that be poor in spirit, that is to the meek and humble, for them will he teach his way, Pfal, 25. 9.

V. 2. As the lilly among thorns I He proceeds to the character of his Church, which he calls a lilly too, but (which is very strange for that flower) among thorns: Bhe is fair and white as lie is, but yet among thorns; that is furrounded, and galled with many tharp and cruel thorns, even as her Beloved who was crowned with them: Ever fince the curse for Adams fin , the earth hath been full of thorns , fo that we are befet with them on every fide : Our fins are thorns, fo are temptations unto fin, 2 Cor, 12, 7. and fo are punishments and afflictions for fin; tribulations come from tribult; and fo are wicked men, Numb 33.55, and wicked actions, as biasphemies, detractions, herefies, schismes, &c. which wound and tear the Church and are worse than the sharpest stings or thorns. So Noah in the midth of the corrupt world, and Lot among the Sodomites, lived as in a thorny hedge, Mich. 7. 4. where wicked men folded themfelves, and conspired together to yex and lacerare the poor Lillies, Nah 1, 10, but God preferved them, and kepe them both fafe and beautiful, in such dangerous mixture, even when they did neither toil nor spin, that is, when they did not many times fo much as dream of it, Matth. 6. 28. Yet thefe thorns have their benefit too, as well as Injury; for they exercife and instruct those that are pricked with them as the Canaanits did Ifrael, and by them God doth net onely humble his people as he did Paul, but likewife direct them, and make them know him, as Gideon did, Judg. 8. 16.

[In the manning the daughters] Or from the daughters, as if the meaning were, that the Church growth up as some flowers do, from thorns; referring it to her flock and extraction, which is, spinola progenies from a wilde and thorny root, as Paul was changed from a bramble into a Lilly velut in spinis mollu rofa furgit acutiu, nil quod lesir habens, matremque obscurat ho-nore. But the received Translation is better, which compareth hore. Dut the received Hammaton Bucket, which Compared the Church of Christ to other Congregations, and preferreth her int dignity and glory above them all. Sitat lenta falent inter-uburna complete, It is oblivered by Rupettus and others, that the word Daughters when absolute and solitary, hath feldome a good tente, fe & nunquam significationem bonam habent filia, cum abfolute dicuntur; like women that lofe their good name, not applied dicentar; like women that tole their good name, no onely by keeping ill-company, bit by keeping none. My Author inflaneth in Gen. 49, 22, where for the English Branches, the margin after the Hebrew, have Daughters; but there are clearer tellimonies, for we find Babylon and Tyre, to have their daughtters, Plal, 45, 12, & 137, 8, but wretched and miferable ones. which as they have the nature of thorns, fo shall they have the doome and fentence, 2 Sant 23. 6, 7. For as they are exceeded by the Church in beauty, so shall they be at last in power t they out grow and diftreffe her for the prefent, but that flou-rithing is but like the exackling of thorns under the pot, which the fire of the Lords jealousie shall consume like dry stubble, Efay 17.4. And then thall Sign be redeemed from all her trou-bles, and as it was her praife to be a Lilly among thorus here, to be pure, and liveet, and innocent among weeds, and thorns; fo thall it be her happinelle to be transplanted then, and to flourish there, where no pricking briar nor grieving thorn shall be to the the charles any more, Ezek. 28, 244.

V. 3. As the Apple tree among the trees of the whole, dye.] The Church leems to be fitongly moved here, and before her Beloved hath well ended his speech, breaks out into an affectionate Elogy of him, which the is not able to expresse, but conquered with her own passion, the sits down and breathes for comfort. For Apple-tree some read Pomecytrone, and for wood, the forrest, or grove; All which expresse the same purpole, and lift up the glory and dignity of Christ, who, as much as a fruitful and wellgrown applie-tree, that is laden and all most oppress with its own delicate fruit, exceedeth the harren trees of the wild defert (which have either no fruit, or else sowre and unwholsome, fitter for fwine than men, and so to be cut down rather, than preserved) and as much as the choycest apples surpasse acorns, or crabs, or men that feed on them are more noble than hogs and beaftsthat, devour the other: fo much and infinitely more doth he transcend the chiefest of the fons, or the young men. They are wilde and empty plants, till implanted into him, and bring forth the grapes of Sodom , unleffe they become his branches, Joh. 15 2. of the Angels are like him, who are goodly Cedars, much leffe the digenerated lons of Adam, who are but thrules, and totten trunks, | fold offices and administrations of it to dispense them, Ephel. 2, 8. compared to him, whose fruits are not onely sweet and aromatical, as the Apple-tree (which in the Hebrew hath a root that fignifies expiration, or breathing sweetly) but likewise various, and manifold, and all those vital and nutritive; for he is the tree of life, and all is deadly that springs not from

I fate down under his shadow with great delight ? Or I have delighted and fate down, or I earneftly defire, or have defired to fit down. As weary travellers feek cool arbours, and deten ces from the hear, and delight in them, fo doth the weary foul feck after Christ, whose Name is the shadow of a great Rock, reck atter until, whose name is the matow of a great Rock, Efay 4, 6, and as 4, &c. Not a fixed way, as that figurifies vanity and emprineffe, so as Ægypt, Efay 30, 2, and Hesbon are, Jerem, 48, 44, which mock and delude those that feck for shellter under them. But a shadow as good Princes are, Lam. 4 20. Nay better than they ; a broad, indeseftive , continual sha dow, under which if we put our felves, by faith (which is a kind of dark shadow too) and hope, (for fitting is the possure of atof dark shadow too) and subject to students students as the tendance, as well as ease) we shall be secured from the sames of Divine displeasure, from the curses of the Laws, and from all assistances and judgements. The phrase of shadowing may feem to allude also to that custome both of the Jewes and other Nations, who were used at their Marriages to spread a robe, like a shadow, over the Bride, Ruth 3.9. Ezek, 16.8, which fignified, that the was not received into the Family, and protection of her husband. Those phancies of the Papilts and others concerning the Apple, and the Apple-tree, (which they will have to answer the fruit which the first Adam was forbidden , and the crofle which was the tree of the second Adam) are fearse worthy to be mentioned; yet their Interpreters are much in fuch trifles , and if they were onely trifles it were more pardonable; for many times they ftretch as wide as blasphemy derogating from the honour and efficacy of his merrits, and applying that to Accidents, and Instruments, which is due onely to the Saviour of the world. Such is that Anthem of theirs, Crux fidelis inter omnes, Arbor una nobilu, Nula fylva talem profert Fronde, fire, germine, dec. with many others of a wor-fer genius, which carry a thin shadow of viety and zeal, but no more; For Christ is onely the refreshing and comforting shadow of his Church; and oh! if the shadow of Peter, which was but his shadows shadow, had such an admirable vertue, how much more will his own, which hath both shade and

and his fruit was sweet to my tasse. Or the oax, the organs of that sense being put for the saculty. This pleasant fruit is the pardon of sin, justification, joy, peace, and other divine graces and confolations, which grow like golden apples on Christ their Tree, and increase by the very gathering: The on the three tree, and interest by the very gathering. The more we plus, and taffe of them, the more we may, Danque awalfo non deficit alter Aureus; and there is nothing to fower, could we get enough of them, could we think our hands (as Thomas did) into his fide, and wounds, through which his bowels and his heart lie naked to the eye of faith, and flow out, as they do in his Word and Sacraments to every worthy Receiver. They have a Monkish Tradition of Bonaventure (their Seraphical Dollor) that being asked by Aquinas from what books and helps he derived such holy and divine expressions, and contemplations, he pointed to a crucifix, and faid, Ifte est liber, dec. That is the book which teacheth and prompts all things that I write; Cast at the feet of that image, my foul receiveth greater light from heaven, than from all study and disputation. A good use may be made of this superstitions fixion; If we activite that to him that was crucified, which they do to the picture: Look upon him, tafte and fee how gracious he is , and no Manna will be fo delightful; for his very word is sweeter than honey, Pfal. 19. 3. and every branch that is in him, shall bring forth fruit like him; sruit unto righteoulness, and the end everlasting life, Rom 6.22 For which cause the Saints whose senses are acute: and exercised, liave not onely loathed other pleasures, compared to him, but also have prayed earnestly, that they might difdain them and find them taftelesse, that he might be so much the fweeter. and his banner over me was love] The vulgar Latine differs here from all, even from the LXX, whom they use to follow in the worft, and read, Ordinavit in me charitatem; the errour whereof her confidents feeing, have no other way of refuge, but either to acknowledge our Version more proper and faithful, as the mo-defter part of them do, or else to reduce theirs to our sense; making ordinavit an expression of war, in which order is most requifite, which can neither be attained nor preferred better, than by banners: And fo, ordinavit (faith a Banner-bearer among them) is as much as vexillavit, and that as vexillum eft, and for at last they come under our banners, and meet with us. The use of Banners is notorious, both in the March, in the Battel, and of namnes is notions, both the matter, in the bacts, and the Titumph; in all which they are respectively, either directions, or incouragements, or Trophees: And so is Christ himfelf the Ensigne of his Church, Esay 11. 10. to gather, to conduct, to animate, to glorifie them, and to lift up his standard against their enemies; that is, to chase them and put them to flight, Esay 19. 19. In which Ensigne the Motto, or Devile, Eagles, and Lions in their Colours; but Love is the Standard-royal of Christ; by which he prevails, and conquers more than Constantine is said to have done with that of his, which if it were really fo, as is related, yet was but a flag or piece of this. For love is that which not onely subdues and vanquisheth all hearts, whole ftrong charges can no more be refifted than a well marshalwhole frong chaiges can no more be reflicted than a well maintailed Army prefling on, and fighting in order; but also that by a wonderful influence, both glorifies and preferves all them that are overcome by it. It is neither loss nor dishonour to be vanquisht in this field; for he that is our Conquerour will fave us, and teach us how to be more than conquerers, if we will not forfake his Colours, but follow him like tall and faithful fouldiers, directing all our fervices to him and to his praife, as we ingaged our felves (or fhould at least) in our Baptisme

V. 5. Stay me with flagans] Or ointments, or flowers, it is a general word for all delights, which the Church here calletheither upon Chuitt, or his Ministers to b ing her speedily, in the cordial promises and refocillations of the Gospel, which may support and comfort her in his absence. The strength of our hearts is Chrift, who upholds them as a ruinated building by his Spirit, His Miniters are in their order pillars also, and so they are sewards of his wine-fellers, appointed to minifter in due fealon, to them that are weary; and that not sparingly in cups, or little vef-fels but in the largest fort, that confolation may abound. They are reproved in the Prophet, that drink wine in bowles, Amos 6, but God hath promifed his Church to make her glad with a whole river which shall replenish and fill her thirsts: and as the nots of the Temple were more both rich and capacious, so are these arge, and sweet, and precious, and yet free and without price.

for I am sick of love] Or wounded, nay stain (as some) with love. Passionate lovers are subject to a hemodupia, to many languishments and desections, and examinations, which cannot be cured, until the defire that is deferred, be fulfilled. And as all affections are apt to overcome and inthrall, if they be vehement; as we read of Jacob, who fainted at the news of Josephs life and honour; the Queen of Sheba aftonisht at Solomons majesty; the devout women filled with fear and great joy at the Refurrection; that Roman Lady who fell down dead at the fight of her two fons, who were reported to be flain at a great battel; and a Viscount of our own Nation, in the time of Hen. 8, who for very joy that his life was pardoned, loft it; perifhing by the means of his preferration; I fay, as it falls out thus in other paffions, fo especially in love which is the supreme, and most victorious of all. Amnon consumes under it, 2 Sam, 13, though his was a base and hellish fire-brand; how much more must they that are inflamed from heaven, and filled with the love of God! This is, Amor vulnerans, and ligans, and languens; by the sweet vehemency and insatiability of it; makes the heart to burn, and weep, and groan, and figh; to forget all, and drive all away but him, on whom alone the fixeth and would reft, but cannot reft until the injoy him in glory. Till then the is fick, and weary, and lives not in her felf, but in him, in whom her life is hid ; and the cannot subsist nor live without his presence and communion. It was one of Platos definitions of love, that it is an Ardour, a Flame of a foul dead in its own body, and living in another: which strange angelical state, none can expresse but they that have felt it; Soli datum est nosse, cui soli datur experiri; and hardly nave ett. 11; Soit datum ett nojic, (ut joit datur experirr; and natur) they; for S. Paul whose heart was wounded by it, could not well declare how it was with him, 2 Cor, 12, 2. But they are happy beyond expression that are transfixed and hurt thus; for these beyond expection that are transixed and note that the wounds are better, than that which we though the health before which was the greater ficknesse. And therefore that is excellent counsel of his, Nudemus membra rostra bono vulners, &c. Y. 6. Ilis

V. 8, The wyce of my beloved ! Behold, he cometh !] Or it is the voyce, as some make it out; for it is an abrupt, sudden expression, as of one hastily awakened or startled from her sleeps and scarce come to her self. Yet she knowes his voyce, and can diffinguish his Accents, from a strangers, John 16, 3, 4. Her fense were fick and drowste, but not dead, nor stupid; she both hears and sees his first approaches, whose voyce like the Baptists, runs before him to prepare his way, and then he comes and enterst and dwels, and bestows larger communications, and further de-behold be flandeth behind our wall] Now Christ is come; whold motions are speedy and imperceptible; His voyce and his presence motions are special and imperceptuale; Firs Voyce and his prelence go together, though his prience is not alwayes edual, set clear alke; but appears gradually, and a full open vision is to be hereafter; I Cor. 13 10 there we shall set him sace to face, but here' we see him as behind a wall, darkly and in pair. This wall is conceived to be the luimane nature of Christ, which was a Green or wall his God-head: Others fay it was the legal ordinances, under which he was thatowed, and which he removed giving more light, Eph, 2/ taprit is a fine conceir of theirs who will have the Sacraments or the Elements in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper to be understood liere, in which they fay Christ is fub fpeciebus, as behind a wall. But that which is most real and fariffactory applies it to the patience and long fuffering of Christ, who waiteth at the walls of our hearts. (as we finde the word nied in the margin of Jerem, 4. 19.) that is, at our outward fenies and realonings, and there knocks and fummons us to admit him, and fometimes feales them and breaks in forcibly, ... he looketh forth at the window; This is the civil, nor comely among men to spie, and peep in at the windows; but Christ may, and will; He is our Stiepherd, our Lord; and a narrow, attentive observation of our inward and most secret actions is the prerogative of his Scepter and Providence. Thus Wildom is faid to do, Prov. 7. 6. and he is that Wildom; therefore we ought to watch over our felves, and not upon prefumption of his ablence take any liberty to do wickedly. flewing himself through the lattessed Or casements, or nets, as the LXK. Through these he stewarth himself, or flourissicht (as out margins more close to the fountain) and biosomers, and shineth lorth. The words are hard, especially the formers which is used in no other place; and so is the lense too, which by fome, is not unfuly applyed to those gracious openings and borings of the heart, by which Christ conveyeth his graces, and offers himself to the fold, to her unspeakable joy and comfort: As sweet plants or flowers grow under windows, and fend in their odone, and branches at the casements. Others, will have it meant of temperations, which are nets and mares, of which all the world is full, and from which onely Christ, can deliver us, by thining into the heart, and fanctifying the 11, there life may enter : But if we confider it onely as exegerical to the former fentence, that explication will be proper enough, and more familiar. Besides all these, I find the conception of a late Father to be ingenious that by this wall and window, and latice is represented the imperfect communion which the Saints have with God here on earth, as persons that love one another but must not come together : they manifest their love at a distance, speak one to another; but there is a wall between them, look one upon another but through a window thew themselves each to other, but through a lattice: what is meant by all this? I konceive two things t First, corruptions, and they are a wall of separation; so that as long as they remain, and that ungodlynese of a mans Nasure. iong as incy remains and true unigousyieue or a, mans Nature, but in any degree unpurged, to long there is a wall between Chrift and the Church, which hinders perfert communion: they do draw near, but Chrift, full im yeloved, is behind the wall, a nearer communion: defited and to be attained. Secondly, a wall of Ordinances, for it is spoken chiefly, no doubt, of the Ordinances of the Church of the Jews, called a wall or partition, Ephel. 2. 14.

there Christ did.manifest himself but darkly they bad a weak mamiestation, and a dark communion with him: And this is true also in some measure of the Ordinances of the Gaspel: for though it be clearer and nearer communion than theirs under the is be clearer and nearer communion than theirs under the Law, Eleb, 13, 23,8. Yet is not fo near as face to face that lee, which full be in glory, when the ungodlynelle of our Nature is perfectly removed, and this corruptible hath put on incorruption; and then this didance full be removed, and we full induce the him mimediately, for the will flandshe that the wall of corruption, and look through the windows of Ordinances no more.

V. 15. Take us the foxes, the title foxes] The words are con-V. 15. Late in the paces, for unite paces 1 In a words are confidered by fome as a promise, that they finall be taken and deroyed, Plaim, 80.14. But they feem tarther a command concerning all the enemies of the Church, either hereticks, and febrifinaticks within her pale; or else persecutours, and profest Tyrants without : Of whom Christ giveth this description, that they are menous: Of whom Cartie given this description, that they are to be raken, that is, found out, judged, convinced, cendired, reproved and punished. That Tyvants are foxes be right of the carties, a Sadduce as Like 13, 2s who was also a kind of Heretick, a Sadduce as fome think, the more to colour his crueltie, and from him fprung the Herodians, Matth. 22. 16. And that Heroticks are so, and Schilmaticks appears by their fruits, and nature; having not onely the craft of that beath, transforming themselves, 2 Cor. 11, 13, carrying a Fox in their bosome, when they are Lambs outwardly; but ing a Fox in their bottome, when they are Lambs outwardly; but allo the rage and bloody cruelty, where they get power, none being like them: for never did the Chutch of God fuffer more from the maddeft and blindeft. Heathens, than they have done from Heretickes, and Schilmatickes, that were among them. The Lord complains for Ifrael, that her Prophets were Foxes, Ezekiel, 13. 4. and the complaint is fo much the juster, because fuch Foxes they are, as can never be extirpated. O the lad perill of these subtil Vipers, which over spread if not corrected quickly, like a canker and poylon, not onely whole houses, but whole kingdomes / what can be too severe, too rigorous a Law against them, who like brute beasts are made to be taken and destroyed? 2 Pet. 2. 12. How excellent is that counfell in this case, which was wicked in Saul, 1 Sam. 23, 22, 23. I shall adde to this, that some understand these little Foxes o finall and little finnes, which though but little, may devour the foul, as well as greater enormities. And fure, it is not fo desperate a state to have the soul attempted by Lions and Bears, (greater and more apparant finnes,) as to have her caten up by vermine by lice and locusts; the customes and habits of those finnes which are accounted inconfiderable. In like manner, is it also as dangerous, for any Church in her spiritual affairs, to grow wanton and negligent, fo as to play with small errours, to tolerate or wink at little abuses, as if she could reform and correct and extinguish them at her pleasure. The little Foxes that seem but despicable, able to do little harm, yet grow bigger and bigger every day, and therefore they should be taken and reproved, and not

CHAP. IV.

The main part of this Chapter is bestowed on the praises of the Charch, whose graces are more elegantly described, than any humane Poetry did ever imitate; the flowers and ornam nts of language that are in it, being not applicable to bodily or natural beauty, b.t to spiritual, and supernal. After this, Christ proceeds to admonith and d.hort her from unworthy fociety and communion; which he urgeth by fresh praises and vows of love. To which the makes a bit. reply by defiring to be made fit for those praises and future affections by the work of his Spirit.

Verse I. Bebold thou art fair my love, behold, &c.] This is spoken bby Christ, as that before which is opened, Chap. 1. 15 The repetition may point to us, both the continual goodnethe of the Lord, and the conflant care which should be in his Church not to defite her felf, but to preferve such a continual beauty as may be fit to entertain him, and to deserve his praises.

V. 2. Thy teeth are like a fliel of sheep that are even shorne] Sheep is an addition here, but expressed Chap. 6.6 and for even shorne, some Bibles have, in good order, which is but the explication of the other. These teeth are descyphered of the Pattors and Teachers of the Church, which should be qualified with all the excellent properties both of good teeth, and of good flocks of the ep as they are here deferibed. It would exceed the measure of an Annotation to collect all the proportions and refemblances that holy men have discovered here. The learned may finde them at large in the Latine Commentators, and in none more fully than in cornel. a lapide in loc, who out of Bernard and others, is very accurate and facistactory. I shall omit all others, and briefly pass thorow those nely which the pric of God hath thought worthy to be mentioned. Whereof the first is, that they are as ceeth. 1. To prepare and divide the word aright, as teeth do the food for the ftomach. that fo the deep and harder things of Religion may be received the better, & more eafily swallowed, and digested, 2. CHAP. V.

Hrist pleaseth to grant the request of his Church, which she made to him in the former Chapter; and being invited, not onely cometh and accepteth her entertainment, but bringeth his friends with him, and feafteth them. This kindnesse (it seems) is not fowell improved by her as it deserved: for surprized by another fit of negligence, and tepidity, she is brought into a fresh danger of losing him, who after much patience uncivil reception, becomes exceeding angry, and being not received when he tender-ed himfelf, departs displeased, and is hardly reconciled; though the restifie much care and importunity in seeking him, suffereth fome loffes and wounds for his fake; and is very large in declar-ing her own love and faithfulnefle to him, by a lively description of his graces and excellencies.

Chap. v. But we may well flick to the first explication, and learn from it, | any careful lovers for them whom they shoft dearly affect: Many that though through native frailty and corruption, the best may put back and lay afide divine imployments and meditations, and deyout exercises (that is, as to the constant Act and observation) yet the godly heart is ever inclining to them, and even when beforred and stupisied by carnal temptations and diversions, doth yet contend and defire to wait faithfully on Christ. The regenerate part, that is the heart, which is opposed to it so far as natural, striverh with it, and even in that reft and peace which is promifed, can find no true peace: So that, as he fayes highly, Laboriofius dormiunt, quam vigilare potnerunt : It is more hard and troublefome for them to be idle (as it is to all generous spirits) than to be doing their Lords work, nor can their souls yeild to such dull stothfulnesse, though their senses may be overtaken: Voluptuous and secure fingers fleep all at once, but he that loveth Christ keeps his heart finners lieep all at once, but he that lovet until keeps in heart watchful. The buindle of the wicked is vanity and dreams, but the very fleeps of the godly are bufie and vigilant: a coording to that famous significant with a wording to that famous significant with a wording to the famous significant with a wording to the famous vigilation. So imany extra vigilis dominentium, fleer action flowing vigilation: So it may extra ly be faid, that which deeper hand rifles when most ferious to work his wick-the wicked fleeps hand rifles when most ferious to work his wick-the viciled fleeps has be tablesoned flowersh. his heart watch, here ednesse, but when the righteous sleepeth, his heart waketh; that is, rifeth and worketh upwards towards God, whom she loveth, and in whom onely she shall then rest most blessedly, when oneand in whom onerly inclinate the first in the learning that they thus imployed. As they say of Adam in Paradise, and the blessed Saints now confirmed, that they never cease from the actual love of God, since the first instant of their creation, There is another sense of the words, which by heart understandeth conscience, whose property it is even in the midft of the deepest luxury and lethargies wherein men can be buried, to lash them up by sharp, and shinging acculations, and terrours; especially when seconded by that other dreadful voyce, which the Church speaks of in the next words.

It is the voice of my beloved that knocketh, faring, Open to me]
This is another fudden apprehension, and sensible acknowledgement of the Churches, to which she is quickned and excited by the ment of the full receive to which in its squickness and exceed with reforming and might really and pullations, by which Christ index-yours to awaken her, be not of dutitud as the ought to be in obeying its and therefore the does here aggravate and may not relate, which is not much the greater because of his mynotheric and which is for much the greater because of his mynotheric and which is for much the greater because of his mynotheric and zender vehemency for admission : For when Christ calls , and tenuer venemency for admittion; For when Christ calls, and knocks, and beggs at the door of our foils to enter, what vile ingratitude is it to flut him our? when he follicits and interests fo many wayes; by his Word and Minifters; by his rod and corrections (which have their voyce, Mich. 6, 9-) by his mercies and kindnelle, but chiefly by the conflant admonitions, and provocations, and motions of his Spirit; what inexcufable, ob-flinate madnelle is it to deny and drive him away? Is any thing So worthy to be harboured there, as he is ? and is it not an incomparable honour, that he will youchfafe to come under our roof? whofoever is shut out, sure he deserves an hospitable reception, who will come and sup with such as we are, and bring his Feaft along with him. Aperi Christo fed extranen claude, feculo claude, the drive away & banish all things elle, but give him the best lodging. It is demanded, Can we open ? is it in our power? hath not be the keyes himself, and is not be the door himself? doth not he that and none can open? Yes, but when he bids thee to open he lends thee a key; and when he infuscth grace and faith, he inables thee to open. It is his gift, but thy grace; his inspira-tion, but thy improvement: And oh! how blessed are they that are but his Turn-keys, his Door-keepers. Is there a greater honour, or happinesse than to co-operate with God, in that which of all others is the most God-like work, the salvation of souls?

my filter, my love, my dove, my undefiled) All these indearing and honouring Attributes are the rhetorick of love, and not one ly testific what special estimation Christ hath of his Church though not free from all infirmities) but should be so many reveral titles and obligations for out love and obedience. Oh what manner of love is this, that God fhould fland, and woo, and what manner of love is this, that God flouid thand, and woo, and beg for that which is his som, and that by I omany Interests. For the Church is, 1. His fifter, of the fame nature and feed that now he hmielf hath, 2. His love, his extent all possibility of the thing and the carry love which prevented all possibility of these to love him, 3. His dove, espouled to him, as to an onely husband, whole chastle embraces the should never for fake. 4. His undefined, or perfect (as some read) that is in him, who cleanful. her from all filthinesie, and will keep her as unspotted as himself And so by all these relations and sacred ingagements, she is bound to honour, and receive him.

for my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night] Both these clauses fignific the same thing, for the head concludes the hair, or locks, or curls; and the dew is nothing elfe but a gentle vapour gathered by the cold of night , and dif folved into drops, by which it covers and moistens the earth; all which is intimated by its origination in the Hebrew (asthe Criticks have observed) and is a most passionate expression of the tender goodnesse and patience of the Lord Tesus, who indures more for his Churches fake, than ever any faithful Jacob did for his Rachel, cold and bitter flormes and blafts doth Christ undergo for his Elects fake; many injuries and discommodities, being exposed to worse usage than Nebushadnezzar was plagued with, Dan. 4.25; It is unexculable ingratitude to to requite him, who fuffers to much for us: who can think of it without hearty tears, that this fhould be all the recompence for fo much mercy ? Others underfrand by this dew and drops, the bleffings and gaces of Christ, who never comes an empty Gueft, but full of spiritual gifts and conforts, which distil from him our head, as the ointments of Aaron upon all his garments: and therefore it is the same unthankfulnelle still to repel him.

V. 3. I have put off my coat, how fhall I put it on ?] See what tain frivolous answers are returned to his love and kindnesse! and how apt we are to cast off those garments of holineste, and spiritual duties, which should ever adorn and invest the foul : We grow weary ttes which monta ever acorn and inventile out. We grow weary of them, and put off those nuprial robes, wherewish our loynes should be girded perpetually; Or though not uterly naked, yet we are apt to pretend we are, making that our apology which flould be our greater shaine, and forming poor excultes, and inconveniencies, as they did in the Gospel, or as the sluggard, Prov. 24. 33. which are unworthy a christian, and will not serve the turn before God who will not be mocked

I have washed my feet, how shall I desile them] This is spoken after the custom of those hot countreys, where they used to wash constantly before they composed themselves for a settled and quiet rest, or before they sat down to eat; and so it was a piece of their hospitality, to wash the seet of their strangers, the default whereof Christ objecteth to Peter as a great unkindnesse, Joh. 7.44. by this custom, the Church would excuse her somnolency and negligence, as if there were trouble or danger in rifing up to entertain him. But these are but sad shifts, worse than his were, Luke 11.7. A christian should indure more for Christ, than a little cold, or unfeafonable diligence : nor can any thing be thought either a pollution, or a difhonour which he requireth from us,

V. 4. My beloved put in his hand by the hole of the door] Hic est feopulus coum (sayes one) qui mente sacrilegă în hoc opere amatoria duntaxat carnis blandimenta meditantur; which is very true; for to an impure fancy this yerfe is more apt to foment kwd and bafe lufts, than to present holy and divine notions ; But fantla fantlis ; Pearls than to present holy and divine notions; But santh speaking reach are not for shiven, not facted things for dops, Math. 7.6. He that reads here must do that really, which the church made but her presence in the former verse; must throw off his slitchy garments, and wath his feet, that is, his affections from all carnal pollutions, and so let him approach and read to his comfort; For then he will discover that hidden Manna which is covered to all other eyes, and hath a more refined and heavenly pleasure here, than grosse and earthly palats can relish; It is shameful to mention what foul ugly rottenetle some have belched here, and how they have neglected that pure and Christian sense that is clear in the words; which, agreably to the former, present a further and higher degree of the patience and goodnesse of Christ; who when outward means, and arguments will not prevail, proceederh more effectually, and workarguments will not prevail, processore more effectually, and work-eth inwardly by the powerful vifitations and penetrations of his fpirit; which are called his finger, and his hand too; Mar, 12, 28, compared with Luke 11, 20. and my bowels were moved for him] Or my belly was troubled; or inflamed, or swoonded in me, at his touch : So here is the great effect of spiritual visitations; close and full workings of Christ in the heart, shake her within, and move powerfully; so that out bowels and dearest affections are stirred and kindled by them, and we cannot but be mightily troubled for displeasing him before, Nay where there is yet but a little impression of God upon the foul, and a small beginning of Divine power, it will command the soul to arise and follow Christ. A little motion of grace, it it be true, will command thoughts, and carry a man, like the influence of Elijabs mantle, (1 Reg. 19. 19.) from all other delights and friendships towards heaven, putting in of his hands at the hole of the door , notes but fecret, and flender act in outward appearance; but yet ie leaves such an impression upon her heart, that she starts up and follows him, even when he had withdrawn himselfe, and never gives over feeking, till she finds him again, He that never felt the power of God exciting and drawing nigh to him, will never feek after God; and he who hath felt but a little work of that, cannot rest till he obtain more; that which was but a hidden motion, will turn into purpole, and that purpole shall be followed with endeavours, and those indeavours shall be proved with practile, and that practile, by daily growth and perfeverance, tially any foul feeles the Divine power in such operations, the more doth it both see its own weaknesse, and is consounded for it: And the more Christ is known and loved, the more we lament our own unworthineste, lest any thing in us should cause him to depart; or may oftend and grieve his spirit. For there is nothing can be matter of deeper forrow or humiliation to the heart, than that the hath neglected or flighted the addresses of the spirit of God in his Ordinances, and not intertained them, as the ought. Tis a great af-fliction as any can be imagined, that Christ should come, and call, and ofter communion to us, and more aids of grace, yet we should be so drown'd with carnal security and desires of mistaken ease and peace, as either not to open to him, but to fcorn thefe fupplyes he fends us, or else to form idle excuses against his intertainment, and so cause him to withdraw and depart from us. And whensoever it shall please the Lord to quicken and sir our hearts with an apprehension of this his absence, and just interception of favour, and communion, and all those inlightning; healing, reviving embraces we formerly had experience of; it will cause our souls to sit down in forrow, and to mourn after the Lord and his glory which is hid from us; and fo it was here, as we read in the next verles; and from us; and to it was nere, as we read in the next veries 3 and 60 it was with David, Plal. 83, & Plal. 79. where his heart breaks within him tor very disquiteness, that he had loss, that spiritual sweemed and secret joys which he had once in his communion with God, before his sin damped it, and cut off that dear correspondence, and those comfortable approaches, which were better than life. For this is certain, as want of Gods presence, and fellowship with him, is the shadow of death, and wages of hell, it felf, whose greatest torment confists in banishment and estrangement, and clongation and loffe, more than in fenfe: So to en joy the comforts of the Divine presence, and to draw nigh to God like a favourite of his and stand in his eye continually, is the very Gate favourite of his and stand in his eye continually, is the very Gate and Preface of Heaven; it is to have eternal life, even here Joh, 3. 14, 15, and to inclofe Heaven within us any where, and every where, and to ref in the bolom of God, the fact of his Jowe and secrets. Nay, beyond all this, it will be found, that whenfover the Gul is returned to her refl again, and hath found her beloved, and he is nearest to ther, and the hath the most fellow whip and command the state of the sta munion with him, even then the will be most deeply humbled both for former and present neglects and intermissions, and unworthirefle. The necrer communion, the greater fobriety and humility; nesse, and cryes with Elizabe h, whence is it that my Lord is pleased to come to mer and is ashamed too of the weaknesse and enmity of her own heart, which still retaines a disposition to drawy back, and so hinders that glorious and constant and daily fellow thip which we might have with God, did not those rude interpofers keep us off at too great a distance from him, and block up our way and accesse unto him, which esse would be more open and free unto us now in the dayes of the Gospel, than ever any of the Saints enjoyed, or could enjoy under the Law, in the highest degree of friendship and spiritual familiarity that we ever read of, Abraham, triendithip and ipiritual ramiliarity that we ever read or. The Lords hand is not short-ned nor his bowels restrained, nor doth he delight less in the fellowfhip of his fervants than in times paft , but is as much taker and ravished with it; onely they content themselves with lesse degrees of it, and to they are not ambitious to preffe hard, and get all the fulneffe of it, which Christ hath purchased and promised, and which the children of God have attained before.

V. 5. I role up to open to my beloved I inward for aw and repen tance is best declared by outward reformation, and bringing forth fruits worthy of that which we professe. The very Hypocrite seels inward and filent checks, and incitations to fincerity; but he quencheth and ftrangleth them; proceeding no further than to weak purpofes and withes onely; but that heart which is broken truly, and troubled for fin indeed, though they fleep and lie as dead for a time: yer will not lie for ever; nor indeed can rest quietly till brought back to God and restored to his bosom whom by her seunity the had dipleated: Of this the penitent product is an hap-py example, I will arife and go to my Father, Luke 14. 18, and my bands dropped with murthe, and my fingers with fweet fmel-ling myribe] Both the prepositions are added here to repair the

All which are but elegant amplifications of the former exposition, shewing that taithful and active indeavours should ever accompany inward motions, and suggestions of grace: The feet should

This is a second effect of security; it will deeply trouble the heart, when foftned and molified a little by grace, to have refisted and refused Christ before; Judas that fold him repented, much more will they whose hearts are opened and melted by his spirit: And truly, they whose hearts are not touched and moved then, may fear that they are but deluded and mocked with vain presumptions, while they continue hard and relent not. God will work upon the heart and give these holy liquesactions to all, unto whom he will give Christ: First, they shall be assumed and unto whom he will give climit. This they make the confounded that they have neglected his words, which like feed under the clods may lie dead awhile, but will spring up and convince them at last; and then will Christ pity their forrows, and come again to bind them up. And therefore as it is a great mer-cy in God to bring his word to our remembrance that we may understand it better; fo when he speaketh, we should be careful to record, and lay up his words, that we may not believe in vain, 1 Cor 15. 2. which words will diffolve (as fire does hard Iron) the most obdurate heart, and make it with indignation to cry out, O wretch, careleffe wicked wretch to despise such love, to neglect fo great compassion I and so fit and prepare it for a new and happier visitation by Christ: So Aquinos both like a Schooleman, and a votary at once, liquefallio importat quandam mollificationem, qua ex-

But it must needs be more genuine to consider them as another a delight to behold him, and to know him more. And to this end enquire and ask of others, that we may be confirmed in the truth, and able to give an account of him to all that require it : And oh! how happy were it for the Church, if her fons and daughters would ask her only fuch questions? not those foolish and unlearned licigations, which we should avoyd as snares, being full of windy strike, and crude emptinesse, which are the seab and disease of the Church, I Tim. 6. 4. but these found and edyfying problems, which tend to edification, and to nouriffment; which it is a chief piece of Christan wildom to learn; that so we may defire and gather not diftempers, but refreshments and health from them.

V. 10. My beloved is white and ruddy This is the description and character of Christ which the Church returns, first in general, and character of chink which the Church returns, fift in general, defeending to the special lineaments and branches of his excellent beauty in the following veries. For white, some read pure, bright, shining, elegant, &c. all which are but several variations of the same thing, and all included in the two words, which are the finme and effence of all Beauty and Majesty. The words are expounded literally by some, of the humane body and efficies of pounded literally by lone, of the humane body and engies of Christ, which, they say, was so goodly and beautiful, that no painter could ever dravy it, because of that (Arias abyuss, y y derro) divine lustre and grace that shone in it: And yet how do the most vulgar and rudest dawbers among them presente to do ir, and like the Prophets carpenter, to worship it when they have done? We slick not upon visible and external colours, which no question were in him most exact and beautiful: This white and red which is here praifed is spiritual, and made him fairer than the fons of is nere praised is pivicual, and made tim fairer than the fons of men. For for Chiff was white in his Divine nature, which was the brightnesse of his Fathers substance, and red in his humanity, be-ing of the same substance with the first Adam, who was made of red earth, white in his holinesse, and red in his blood and sufferings; white in his own immaoulate purity and innocence, but red in the imputation of our fins, which are like fearlet and crimfon, Elay 1. 18, white in his goodnelle and free grace to humble finners, but red and bloody to all his enemies that will not fuffer him to rule over them. Thus should we present and describe him both to our own and others affections, which is called by the Apofile, the messyphosous of Chift, and is better than any crucifix' or picture, Gal'3.10. And feeing he is thus white and beautifix, or pilutre, Gal'3,10. V. 13. His cheeks are as beds of spices, as sweet flowers. For Beds, we may read banks, or borders; or (with some) boxes and pots of spices: and for sweet flowers, some read, towers of sweetnelle: others ripe plants that breed ointments, or that are planted and ftrengthened by the confectioners: which are rich lymbols of that sweetnesse, life, comfort, that live in the amiable countenance of the Lord Jesus Christ; In whose presence and favour is fulnesse of joy and pleasures for evermore. It is said of Alexan-der the Great, that his skin and flesh were persumed naturally, and that there breathed from him (fuch was the exact temper and concoction of his humours) a fragrancy as of flowers and spices, le is concerns of this fundamental regarders as of nower same pieces, and in most true of Christ, whose garanents finell of myrrhe, cassia, and all spices, and in whose cheeks they grow and shourish; so that we may without statery apply to him that of the Panegyrick; in ipso wastu two videbam omnia signa virtusum, in fronte gravitatie, in oculie lenitatie, in rubore verecundia, in fermone juftihi hip are lilies, dropping [weet smelling myrrhe] It is usual with profane Authours to expresse elegance by lilies, and so the preaching of the word is frequently compared to dropping, Deut. 32. 1. Job 29 22. First, because this infusion must he made by degrees, as into marrow vessels, which cannot receive all at once, Animirades quantum excipere possion, videndum est. And scondly, because it maketh fruitful, and rich, as the dew which sinks gently into the earth, and makes it fertile; that he which fowes in tears may reap in joy, But then it is compared to myrrhe for other causes; As 1. Because as myrrhe is bitter and distassful, so the very word of grace is unwelcome and distassful; being contrary to carnal lusts, and sensual appetitions, teaching love of enemies, contempt of the world, self-denial, &c. which are duri sermones, hard and fowre precepts to flesh and blood. 2. Because as myrrhe is a rare prefervative against purrefaction, and rottennesse; so the word of Christ is a word of life, able to fave the foul. If he fay the word we shall be healed and live; whose powerful authority not only the stubborn Jews admired, Matth, 7, 29, and the winds and

This expression is of the same nature with that, Chap. 4 9, and spoken by the same person, that is Christ; not by the Church, as fome who confider not the original Idiem would have them Some explications would render them as a reproof of her boldnesse and curiofity in gazing upon Christ and his incomprehensible nature too much: Trenching is of a judgement clean contrary to these, for he reads them as a command, Turn thine eyes to me, that they may lift me up; as if Christ were comforted or glorified in the glory and comforts of his Church : But the most facile and general opinion is, that they are a most elegant (and indeed poetical) expression of abundant, ardent love, uttered by Christ as hy one wounded and overcome in battel, by the darts of his enemy. We read of Ahab when shot in fight, he cryed to the driver of his Charead of Anna when how in many in crycu to the unity of his Charch, riot, Turn thy hand, &c. 1 King 12.34. This pointle is plain and evident, both in the Propher and event; but what the Queens and concibines here should mean, is not fo quickly understood? The word to concubine the conclusion of the word to conclusion in the propher and the propher man, is not fo quickly understood: The word for concubine in the Hebrew is exprologized wirtly by some from two other words of that Language, which put regether, figurifie that which the Greeks call just justage. Some old Latine in Justice they just, and we may presume to English, an half-wife; because they wanted many of those privileges and honours the duckers to them that were the true and lawful, wives: as it will be the company to the methal to They had no downies as the other commonly had, especially among the Heathen. Secondly, they had no publick rices or solemnies neathern secondry, they mad no publics rices of folemnites used at their entertainment, but only were received by mutual confent and the (and therefore called Uuraris*) into the bed, which yet it was death for them to defile.

3. They had no inheritation that the state of the tance, nor their children, but only gifts and portions (for that case of Jacobs sons by his concubines) was of an extraordinary nature and dispensation.) 4. They had no rule nor authority in the family, but rather were to honour and reverence the chief and lamily, but rather were to minour and reverence the chief and true wife upon all occasions, as we read of Hagar, Gen. 16, 9, and Plal. 45. 14. which was the reason why those high and greas Queens of Persia and other countries suffered them to patiently of old: Dia to to Basilisa und the mulanisar Berneueda. mesor word you a univ. Therefore, (as I faid) doe but supply the note of comparison, which is often omitted in the Hebrew, note of companion, which is often onlined at the Nam-for greater Elegancy, and then all will be manifest: Name-ly, that the Church is dear unto Christ, as the onely childe is unto a tender Mother that bare it. There is, no people, is unto a tender Mother that bare it, Incre is no people, one nation to dear unto God, as his own people, Exodus, 19, 5, 2 Samuel 7, 23, and Plalm 147, 20. Nay, mothers may fooner forget their onely infant, than he will forget her, Elay 49.11. Tantum chara fibi, quantum nec filia matri. One thing more is noted here from the term una, or unica, rather, that the Church as the is but one, so the is the onely One in whose bosome her parts and members can hope to be found accepted and beloved; therefore not to be despited, devouted, hated by any that wait for falvation, Quia extra hanc quam dicimus Ecclesiam nemo ad perfellio-nem, nemo ad vitam nisi per hanc solum gratia fovente nu-

V. 11. I went down into the garden of nuts to fee the V.1. I went down into the gaiden of inits to get the fruits of the valdgr] Here Chilf beginnes to fpeak again, and declares his great care and diligence in vihiting and overteeing his Church; Fremelius reads I went down into my drelled, or pruned garden; orders, garden of nutengs; Indeed, the word is one of those that are peculiar to this book, being sound no where else in the Scriptures, and therefore doubtful and obscure; Dus so cerein. tain we may conclude, that it fignifies not any common or vulgar fort of that fruit, but fuch as was rare and precious; and fo is worthy to figure the mystical Paradise of Chrift, which he is pleased to regard, and to take care of the growth and fruitfulnesse of all her plants; a special word (but yet collective too, as almost all such in the word (but yet conceive too, as almost all fuch in the holy tongue) being put for a general. For fruits of the valleyes, some also read the Apples, or the greenness of the streams, which use to runne among the valleyes, and represent the fruitfulnesse and propagation of the the labour of his hands, who is the chief gardiner, and master of the orchyard, Mat. 21, 34.
to see whether the vine flourished, and the pomegranates budded] For vines, the vulgar Latine read vineyard which is all one in substance, but differs from the letter which as an one in mourtaince, but anters from the effect which fould not willingly be deferred. Nothing is more known, than that comparison which is fo frequent in holy Scripture of the Church and a vineyard; Pfal, 80, 8. Elay 5, 132, 8C, which similitude as it holders in many other proportions, so especially in this, that as vines and vineyards are apt to grow wild and ruinous unleffe continually dreffed, and carefully kept; fo is the Church apt to be infected and overgrown with all hurtfull errours and corruptions, unleffe Chrift watch over her, and fend fuch watchmen and labourers as will overfee and attend her. Now Christ is not faid to go down and visit his garden, because he is ignorant of faid to go down and visit hi garden, betausch he is ignoran of her condition; no more then the Loud was ignorant of her condition; no more then the Loud was ignorant of softense vickednesse, when he said he would go down and see whether it were so great, as the cry of it which was come up unto him, or no. Gen. 18.1, I had to remonstrate first his own tender inspections and solicious vigilancy over them, and scondly, to these how much it concerns us to look to out selves very circumspetty, seling the eye of Christ is upon us; and if any bring forth good fruits, he will help them to be more fruitful fail, John 15:15.2, this if they either bring torth none at all, or eits share with the solicious constants. ne wit neip them to be more traitent with John 15, 15, 2, but it they either bring torth none at all, or elfe that which is wild and degenerous, then he will cut down, nay extrapate them, and caft them into the fire! which is dreadful, as the Ax is worse than the knife, and to consume more as the Ax is weste than the knife, and to consume more fearful than to purge. I shall not take notice here of that excredency which the LXX, and others adde to these vines and fruites, parching up this weste with an affumentum of their own, (there will I give the my heastly) which hath no footing, nor colour in the original.

I am my beloveds, and his desire is towards me No difference at all in Translations about the former Claufe, which we have had severall times before; but the latter is read diversely; Tremelius for And reads quan-doquidem, seeing that his defire; making this the eviadquidem, leeing that his derive; mixing this the evi-dence and proofe of that, as indeed it is: For Defire, the vulgar Latine, reads Convertion, or return, which is all one in effect, for as we avert and fly from that we hate, so doe we return, and see that which we defire! The phrase hate a double signification, as may apfire: The phrase hath a double fignification, as may appears from Genesis 3, 16, and 4, 7, in which places it fignifies either dependence, and subjection, or else great love and affection; both which, the Church (whole words these are) had found very richly abounding in Chitif: For the second, no question can be made of 8, and though the other may be doubtfull, and indeed cannot be afectived to Christ, as he is the Head of the Church, for fo he hash preheminence over all, and cancanteet, for to no train prenountener-over any and cannot be faid to be fubiefd, or to depend; yet as he is her Beloved, and Husband, he may without any diffurangement be faid to have his defire (that is to be fubject) unto her; loving Husbands will be ruled by their dear VVives, and will deny them nothing that is fit: It is faid VVives, and will deny them nothing that is fit: I tis faid of Livia, that by her fweetenfle and dutilitatelle to him, the commanded Augustus Cerlar, the great Emperour of the World 1 80 de nor, we finde that Chrift is faid to wait upon his people, Elay 30, 13, and doeth nor he give her leave to command him, Elay 45, 119. V. 13. The mindrakes give a smell] The word for man-drakes is hard and uncertain in the Hebrew, being not found in the Bible except in this place, and that of Genesis 30. 14. To which the Christian Reader will doc well, to look back and confult with the Annotations and Comments on it for better fatisfaction. If they were flowers, or fome other pleasant kind of herbs, or fruits, (as is probable) nothing could be a more proper and genuine Metaphor to express that which is generally intended in this Song, wherein the wife Composer rifles and plucks all the rarities of Nature, to describe his facred, and supernatural mysteries, to which the whole creation is not enough to bee an Allegory. How many of the chiefest pieces of that rare treasure hath he mentioned before? and left any that is strange and wonders tioned before a and left any that is trange and wonder-bul flould be omitted, now this of Mandrakes is added, Such is the marchlefle riches, and swettnesse of the sub-ject of this Poem, to which all the storehold of the whole world from both her spheres contributes, and-yer all is not sufficient : But Mandrakes are no leife mysteatt is not intreent: But manarases are no tene mytte-rious and unknown than the Parable it felf; and th re-fore it will bee best to spare long disquistion and dis-putes about them, this being enough to reft upon, that if their naturee and vertue be such as it is reported by the learned, and these are that powerfull Mandiagora of which the Greek herbaliks and others write fo much, whole great effects are love, and fruitfulnelle, and fleep; then it is evident, that they are most apt symbols and figures of grace, and all other divine and heavenly influngues or grace, and all other daying and nearestly similar ences, which not onely conciliate love and charity, where there was none before, but likewife make the barren heart fluitfull in every good work, and quiet the troubled and perplexed heart with abundance of peace

37,7,8,9 is held in the Galleries The vulgar Latine joyn this claufe without any partition to the former, and labours to make founching of it, but with unhappy fuccifs. None come fo fully, and fastisyingly to the Text, and the understanding of both, as Tremelius, who makes it an inene understanding, or oots, as a remeilus, who makes it an in-tire, though abrupt fentence, as our English doth; and to my apprehension hath a more folid and pious note up-on these words, than any other part of this Book. I have transcribe it for his lake, and theirs who have not alwayes his larger Edition at hand: Nullus Ren (faith he) tanta gleria praditus qui aspellu tua istius gloria expleri possi; sed confixus de siupens ad aspellum ejus perpetuo videndi tui defiderio tanquam vindins teneretur, tanti glorium tuam pra just of tailus mundi gloria faceret. But let us choose rather as we have deliverance from it. but let us enooie rather as we have done before to make it the wonder and rapture of those glad spectators and friends of the Church, the blessed Angels, &c. who do here again break forth into joyful acclamations and praises of her blessed condition. There is some variation in the Versions; Some read instead of from the wildernesse, all in white, following that As-Asoxa Significant which is found (God knower by what ir-reption it came thicker) in some copies of the LXX, inftead of and spines which the Completent, Edition receiveth, And as they erred in changing words, fo like-wife the vulgar Latine have in adding, who infert with-out any ground in the Originall, the Delicin affluens, our any ground in the Original, the Delicin affiners, which is a redundancy that they have no excite for but this, that the same Hebrew word may fignific both, and that because it is of a doubtful, and difficult constru-tion, they took in both, lest one should not be enought True indeed, the word is very hard, being (as the lear-ned note) rather of an Arabick extraction than an Hebrew of the Hebrews, and not found elsewhere in all the Scriptures. But how this can be cause enough for their superfluiries and needlesse additions, let the Reader judge; such an excrescency might have been pardonable as a Scholium, or Annotation, but no reason it should be admitted into the Text it self, which should be kept be annitted into the lext it lett, which inould be kepe imple and unmixt in all its efficiency. Yet it is not onely they who are thus uncertain, and imperfect; for the LXX, and where are no lefte various; In some copies we find its unmicopiers, in others in the Manufair, which are rendred as variofly, but yet alwayes with a true and proper respect to the Fountain, which may answer both proper repect to the rountain, which may animer count-for the word not only may bear that learning upon, or cleaving to andwathering, which our English Bibles have cholen, but also the other of recumbency, or lying in the bolome, which we find in Origen and Ambrofe, and of a concer remodificates both the Faith and Love of the fo at once remodificates both the Fairn and Love of the Church, whereby flut both leanch upon Chiff as her foutndation and support, and likewise restell in him as her joy and delight: Thus did lohn lie in his bolome who was his belowed, John 13; 3, 8; at a. o, and thus are we commanded not to lean on our selves, Provetb. 3, $. but to make the Lord our support, who is able to up-hold us, lerem. 10, 23, and without whose supportations we are apt (as the weak Vine, without her wall, of poles) to fall and fink. what shall we do for our sister is manifelled by those many testimonies and probacies of Scripture, which though all received and understood not, yet without question they were not wholly ignorant of; For the Prophets were diligent both in fearching into it, and in speaking of that grace which should come unto the Gentiles, as we read 1 Pet, 1 to. And therefore the wifer - and more that grace which mound therefore the wifer, and more godly part of the Jewes were very mindfull of them, and defired their reduction: witnesse this Scipture, which is full of charitable care and folicitude for them, as if they confulted with Christ for some choice and excellent mercy, what shall we doe? what Graces defire? what furtherance yield to them? Alas! it is a fad thing to fee fo many fonnes, fuch a multitude of children in her, and many fonnes, fuch a multitude of children in her, and yet no breaft to confort them: what can be a greater infery, a more grivous plague and judgement? And they that would bee perfect must goe and doe so like-in the day when she shall be spoken for? Or, wherein speech shall be of hor; or unto her, or against her. The day of grace is not alwayes at hand; he who is the Lord of time and seasons, hath ordained and appointed such opportunities according to his own pleasure: As he came in the fulnesse of time; that is the time decreed and predetermined by himselfe; so did he ordain a time, and fer a day, for the visiting of the Gentiles, that they might be gathered into a setled Church, and called into the communion of the covenant of grace by the Gospel, which should be revealed. This day was forescen by them whose eyes the Lord was pleased to enlighten, and they re-joyced in it though asar of; how much more cause have we to magnific and blesse that Sun of righteousnesse who brought light to the Gentiles, and glory to his whole Israel

Israel.

Others againe, will have the words to be Comminatory, and full of terror to them, that if they continue (what they had been) as a Wall to defie, to refift holy motions and warnings, and feparate themselves by their oblitinate iniquities from God, fo that hee may hackny mages they may be the country of the world lay fore the continuation of the continuati and heavie judgements and burdens upon them, which they will have to be phrased by building Palaces of silver, because in Senece and other Authors, imponere tributa, is the same with Inadificare: But if they will open to him, and receive him into their hearts by the door of Faith , then he will establish and confirm them as with boards of Cedar. But lastly others, (and the best of all doubtlesse to the Text) will have them to bee words of tender love and providence; and that as in the letter they are but elegant circumlocutions and fimili-tudes which expresse (as Gratine sayes) Egregii curamma-rii; their care of providing a worthy Husband for their Sister, so spiritually they signific, that Christ and his fervants will be wanting in nothing, but do all for her dervants will be wanting in nothing, but do all for her that they can in her refeelive conditions, They will make her a Wall first, give her a Foundation and a Name, fepartae and divide her from others, and when that is done, they will enlarge her, and increase her beauty so, that (as that Emperour said of Rome, invenit Laterition, reliquit marmorem) from poor, and weak, and contemptible, the thall become, ftrong and glorious, and the house of the great King, Pfalm 48.

Ephel 2, 20, 21, 22.

Which words are either to be looked upon, as the effect and issue of her being built, up through Christ, or csic as the cause of it; which is nothing clic but the free gace and metry of God, who when, we were Enemies and Rebels against him, did yet work peace and reconcilisation for us. Rom, 5 1, and 10, when we were shones despited, and refused, did challed to the her to the present in his side to an official and refused, did challed to the her to the present in his side to an official side which we have the benefits in his side to be present in his side to an official side. us to be precious in his fight, not fuffering us to perification among the rubbish of the World, in the blindnesse and crookednesse of our hearts, but digging us out, and po-lishing us for his own Temple did exalt us into a spiritual house, &c. 1 Pet. 2, 4,5,6,7,8,9,10. We cannot omit that Tremelius doth here goe alone, and reads singularly, prope confeents, I had almost gaind favour in his eyes, wherein though he depart from other translations, and perhaps from the rigour of the Hebrew Text, yet his Observation and Note makes amends for his feration, which is, that the Church being now thus ferled and composed, rejoyeeth in her own happy condi-tion, though it be not abfolutely perfect. She was not yer fully compleat, nor yet far off rom it; which was a great bleffing, as the confeled, and so should be ac-knowledged by all her Members who are bound to praise the Lord for any inchoations and defires of truth and peace, though yet not arrived at the full measure and confummation thereof; if it be but proph, nigh at hand, and a little way off, they should bless him for it, and by hope and patience possess their soules untill they enjoy all, and from the Porch bee brought into the Chamber of Presence. V. 11. Solomon bad a vinterard at Badal-Hamen] Thefe words down to the laft verse are most fitly applyed to Christ, who in them, first is pleased to commend and extol his Church, and then after to exhort and admo-nish her; which is the art of true Rhetorick, since nothing is to likely to incite and kindle ingenuous natures, as praise and honour. Now this dignity and worth for which the Church is magnified, is advanced by compa-rison, which is taken from the riches and fertility of the choycest Vineyards in Judra, of which no question but Solomons was one. The word for Vine-yard is generical, and may be extended to all forts of rural polleffiens, whether, Orchards, Gardens, &c. For Engl-Hamon, fome read, a countrey which hath much people, or is populous; changing the proper name into two Appella-tives, vyhereof the first half signifies to have, and the latter, a multitude : others turn it , in a fruitful place, not with respect to the Grammar so much, as the sense; because (say they) it must needs be a fruitful place that is able te keep luch multitudes: But vve need not these compulsions, vyhercof none can be more fignificant or useful, than the proper and native reading; it being afferted by the great Grotius and others, that such a place there was not far from Jerusalem; which is more probably meant here, than that Hamon in the division of Naphtali, vyhereof vvc read 1 Chron. 6.75.
